

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. PREFACE

DURING the critical period of Bible study that is just passing, the Hebrew lyrics, and especially the great psalms of the Old Testament Psalter, have been to a certain extent neglected. The present generation, however, is beginning to experience the joy of rediscovering them. Like the Gospels in the New Testament, they are the real heart of the Old Testament. In them the innermost soul of the Jewish race is laid bare. In such psalms as the eighth, the twenty-third, the fifty-first, the ninetieth, the ninety-first, the one hundred and third, and the one hundred and thirty-ninth Israel's faith finds its noblest expression. These immortal hymns of praise and adoration are also the link that binds the Old to the New Testament. In their atmosphere Jesus was born, bred, and lived, Faith, hope, joy, love, loyalty, and service are the six virtues pre-eminently emphasized. A dauntless faith in God and in man; an invincible hope that the future holds in store only what is essentially good; a serene joy even in the presence of disaster and distress; a passionate love of nature, of nature's God, and of all his creatures; a devoted loyalty to the law, to the institutions and ideals of the race, and to the divine Father who inspired them; and, to crown all, a burning zeal to help the needy, the ignorant and erring, and to carry the knowledge of God and the blessings of true religion to the ends of the earth—these are the supreme contributions of the psalms to the present age. Here Israel's greatest prophets, priests, and sages speak out of the depths and richness of their own personal experience directly to the heart of modern man.

The past century of biblical discovery and research has added much to our appreciation and interpretation of the Old Testament lyrics. The recovery of the ancient Egyptian, Sumerian, and Babylonian hymns has broadened our horizon by at least two millenniums. The discovery of Hebrew, Greek, and other texts, far older than those followed by the translators of the classic Authorized Version of the Bible, has made it possible to substitute in most cases original readings for uncertain conjectures. The rediscovery of the genius of Hebrew rhythm has placed in the hands of the modern translator a most valuable aid in recovering the original text. That the canons of textual revision must be faithfully applied to the Hebrew lyrics is strikingly illustrated by Psalm 18, which is quoted in toto in II Samuel 22. Out of the thirty or more variations between these two versions of the same hymn there are at least twenty examples of scribal errors in the Hebrew text of Psalm 18, which fortunately may be corrected by means of II Samuel 22 as well as by the aid of the Greek and other versions. Like most of the books of the Old Testament, the psalms have not escaped the zeal of the later scribal revisers. As a rule these later explanatory or expansional revisions can be readily recognized; but to cut and hew the Hebrew lyrics to fit a theoretical strophic structure (as certain recent translators and commentators have done) is not only unscientific but in most cases reveals a failure to appreciate the logical and literary unity of the individual psalms. Equally fatal is the tendency to measure Oriental poetry by arbitrary Occidental standards. Another Oriental characteristic of the Psalter—the fact that its prayers and hymns are not logically arranged—has presented to many readers and students a most serious difficulty. In this volume the Hebrew lyrics are first classified according to their content and dominant motive and then, within each group, arranged as far as is possible in the order in which they were written. The translation also aims to reproduce the measured beat and the strophic rhythm of the original Hebrew, so that general students of literature, as well as special students of the Bible, may enjoy the matchless beauty both of the form and the thought of these Hebrew classics.

THE GENERAL CHARACTERISTICS OF HEBREW POETRY

POETRY may be defined as the imaginative and rhythmic expression of the insight, the feeling, and the creative thought of an inspired soul. In brief, it is thought and emotion set to the music of words. Its object is to awaken and direct the imagination and emotions of the hearer or reader so that he will also share the poet's own insight, feeling, and thought. As the fundamental meaning of the word implies, the poet is a maker, a creator, as well as an interpreter. There are four essential elements in all poetry: (1) inspiration, (2) imagination, (3) creative power, and (4) rhythm. Back of all poetry is some inspiring force that stirs the mind of the poet. It may be the beauty of nature, a striking national or personal experience, an illuminating idea, or a deep emotion. Underlying all these, faith recognizes the spirit of the Eternal who, in different ways, touches and imparts his truth to the responsive mind of the poet. The real poet must also possess the power of imagination, the ability to see clearly and concretely with his mental vision that which is not perceived by the ordinary man. Furthermore, he must be able, by the aid of his imagination, to describe his vision in appropriate words and figures and thus to present it clearly and concretely to the eyes of his fellow men. Finally, the prevailing conception of poetry demands that it shall be rhythmic in form. This essential characteristic may be expressed by the rhythm of regular metre, as in Greek poetry; by the rhythmic sound conveyed by the concluding words of each line, as in most English poetry; or by the rhythm of recurring thought. Above all, the rhythmic form must be in harmony with the thought or passion which inspires it.

The
essential nature
of poetry

The earliest examples of Babylonian and Egyptian literature are distinctly poetic in form. In ancient Greece the bards began to sing their songs centuries before the appearance of the philosophers and historians. Among the early Germans and English the art of poetic composition developed long before that of prose writing. The Hebrews were no exception to this rule. Scattered through the earliest prose writings of the Old Testament are older fragments of popular poems that were current at the beginnings of Israel's history or inherited from its Semitic past.

Its
origin

The reasons why men first expressed their thoughts in poetry are not difficult to discover. They are illustrated by the natural impulses of the child, which to-day faithfully reflect certain of the initial stages in the development of the human race. With him imagination and rhythm, two of the chief characteristics of all poetry, are innate. To dance and skip is for him more natural than to walk. Poetry, with its rhythmic measure and strong appeal to the imagination, is remembered long after plain prose has been forgotten. Nature also tends to emphasize the rhythmic tendencies inherent in the human soul. The rise and fall of the waves, the rhythmic swaying of the trees, the changing phases of the sun and moon, the regularly recurring cycles of the seasons left their deep impression upon primitive man. In him that which was rhythmic found a quick response, even as does martial or rhythmic music in the modern child. The expression of thought or passion in literature was not easy for early peoples. It was only under the impelling influence of a strong, creative force that they overcame the inertia and clothed their ideas in words. It was natural and practically inevitable that the product of that creative force should be poetry. Thus the shepherd prophet Amos, under the influence of a clear vision of impending danger and of a powerful religious and patriotic emotion, voiced his warnings to the nobles of northern Israel in exalted poetic diction. The divine truth had taken possession of him and nothing less than poetry could express the conviction and message that burned within him.

INTRODUCTION

The reasons why early man used poetry

General characteristics of Semitic poetry

The monuments of Babylonia and Egypt have shown that the general characteristics of Hebrew poetry were not peculiar to the Israelites but were shared in common with the Semitic nations that preceded them. The old Sumerian and Babylonian accounts of creation and the ancient hymns sung to the gods by the early inhabitants of the Tigris-Euphrates valley were characterized (1) by a measured beat recurring in succeeding lines and (2) by the rhythm of thought; that is, the second or succeeding lines repeating or else developing the thought of the first line. This same rhythm of measured beat and recurring thought is found in the earliest Egyptian hymns. In many of these poems each succeeding line had three accented syllables. More rarely the four-beat measure prevailed. From the middle of the nineteenth century B.C. comes a noble Egyptian hymn, addressed to Sesostrius III, which not only illustrates these fundamental characteristics of Hebrew poetry but is also in the form of six strophes of ten lines each. In Egyptian poetry, however, as well as in the Babylonian, the strophic rhythm appears to have been occasional and exceptional rather than the general rule. The thought always dominated the form, and bold departures from the prevailing measured beat are not uncommon. The same is true of early Arabic poetry. While there are many recurring refrains, a regular strophic or metrical structure is exceptional. It was not until Greek culture began to exert a powerful influence upon Arabic and Syriac poetry that the regular metre with measured syllables first appeared in Semitic literature.

The rhythm of measured beat in Hebrew poetry

True to its Semitic inheritance, the fundamental characteristics of Hebrew poetry are the measured beat and the rhythm of thought or sentence. Under the influence of the Greek and Roman ideals of poetry, scholars have for centuries sought to find in the poetry of the Old Testament a metre dependent upon the quality and quantity of the syllables. A few of the late psalms may conform to this standard, but otherwise the quest, as might be anticipated in the light of the Semitic inheritance, has been in vain. Apparently the Hebrew poet considered only the accented syllables. The genius of the Hebrew language gave him considerable liberty in this respect, for it enabled him to combine, as his needs required, certain short words so that they might be pronounced together with one accent. The music, which was a frequent, if not the constant accompaniment of early Hebrew poetry, likewise favored the measured accentuation of succeeding lines. It is probable that the poets in reciting their poems were allowed large freedom. Many of them, like the earlier Babylonian and Egyptian poets, frequently departed from their adopted measure, especially at the beginning and end of stanzas. In general the tendency was to begin with a longer and to close a stanza with a shorter line. Sometimes the Hebrew poets passed abruptly from one kind of measured beat to another. Thus a part of the charm of the peerless twenty-third Psalm is that it begins in the first stanza with the three-beat, passes in the second to the four-beat, and rises in the last stanza to the five-beat measure.

The two-beat measure was used but rarely. Its staccato notes were well adapted to express the trumpet note of warning on the appearance of a foreign foe or for use in the popular songs that accompanied the rapid dance. By far the most common measure or metre (using the word in its broadest sense) adopted by the Hebrew poets was the three-beat. It was admirably adapted to the length of the ordinary brief, forceful sentence and enabled the poet to present his thoughts in rapid, effective sequence. The four-beat measure was used but rarely. It was employed by Amos in the vigorous argument which he introduced in the latter part of the third chapter of his prophecy and not infrequently by the psalmists with impressive force. Next to the three-beat the five-beat measure was used most frequently by Israel's poets. It was really a combination of the three-beat with the short two-beat measure. The latter, like a catch in the breath, suggested with rare effectiveness the deep emotion that filled the heart of the poet. In later days it was the characteristic measure employed in the lamentations uttered over the bier of the dead. Jeremiah's impassioned warnings and appeals to his erring countrymen are all expressed in this dramatic measure. It was also used, as by the second Isaiah and the authors of many of the psalms, to voice the profound emotions of praise and thanksgiving which breathe through these immortal poems. Very rarely, as in Psalm 127, the six-beat measure is found. Thus, not only by their words and thoughts and gestures, but by the poetic measures which they employed and by the cadence of succeeding sentences, Israel's poets were able to appeal to the trained instincts of their hearers and to convey their ideas with a remarkable completeness and emotional coloring. One of the chief charms of the Authorized Version is that its translators instinctively reproduced, to a great extent, the lilt of the Hebrew, although they printed all poetry as prose. In the present text an attempt has been made to reproduce, as far as is practicable in an exact translation, the measured cadence of the original Hebrew.

INTRODUCTION

rhythm
thought

A characteristic of Hebrew poetry, even more fundamental than the cadence of measured beat, was the rhythm of thought in succeeding lines. By its modern discoverer, Bishop Lowth, it was called parallelism, although the term is not entirely exact. To the Western ear repetition of thought is tautological, and tautology is displeasing; but to the Israelites the essence of poetry was the rhythm of idea. Unquestionably this fundamental characteristic of Hebrew added greatly to its clarity and effectiveness. If the thought was not fully expressed in the first line it could be brought out clearly in the second. This type of rhyme bound the different members of the verse close together and gave to Hebrew poetry its forceful, didactic quality. It was also far easier for the poet to conform to the canons imposed by the rhythm of thought than to the more mechanical demands of a formal metre or rhyme. Thus the Hebrew type of rhythm, instead of impeding, greatly facilitated the free and effective expression of the poet's thought.

Synonymous parallel-
ism

Three primal types of parallelism or rhythm of thought may be distinguished. The first is the synonymous or repeating parallelism in which the second line repeats the thought of the first in slightly variant form. Sometimes it amounts to practical reiteration, as in Isaiah 15¹:

In a night Ar of Moab was devastated, ruined,
In a night Kir of Moab was devastated, ruined.

More frequently the principal words in the second line are synonyms of the corresponding words in the first line, as, for example, in Psalm 51⁷:

Purge me with hyssop, and I shall be clean,
Wash me, and I shall be whiter than snow.

This synonymous or repeating parallelism is by far the most common type in lyric poetry. It lent itself naturally to the expression of emotion and the results of quiet meditation.

Antithetic
parallel-
ism

The second type was the antithetic or contrasting parallelism in which the second line presented a parallel and yet contrasting idea. This form was very rare in lyric poetry, but was frequently used by the wisdom writers, for dramatic contrast is a most valuable aid in impressing an important truth, especially upon the minds of the young. The following are examples of this type:

A fool's anger is known at once,
But a sensible man overlooks an insult. (Pr. 12¹⁶.)
Better the little that the righteous have
Than the wealth of many wicked men. (Ps. 37¹⁶.)

Synthetic
parallel-
ism

The third type was a synthetic or developing parallelism in which the thought of the first line is completed or expanded in the second or succeeding lines. This form was especially fitted to express developed thought and complex emotion and was frequently employed by the gnomic as well as the lyric poets. Thus Proverbs 15³ reads:

The eyes of Jehovah are in every place,
Keeping watch over the evil and the good.

Certain other less common types of parallelism are found. These are in reality more complex developments of the three primal types. One is emblematic parallelism, in which a common experience or truth is illustrated by a comparison usually drawn from nature:

Emblematic parallel-
ism

As cold water to a thirsty man,
So are good news from a far country. (Pr. 25²⁵.)

In Psalm 37¹ the first two lines are in a synonymous parallelism, the third and fourth illustrate the emblematic type, while the second of two couplets stands in synthetic relation to the first:

Fret not thyself because of evil-doers,
Nor be envious of those who do wrong,
For as grass they will quickly wither,
And like the green herb fade away.

Another type is the stair-like or chain-like parallelism in which a word or thought in one line is taken up and expanded in each succeeding line. It is in reality a developed form of the synthetic parallelism. Thus, Psalm 24^{3b}, ° reads:

Stair-like parallel-
ism

Who is the King of glory?
Jehovah strong and mighty,
Jehovah mighty in battle.

And Psalm 31, 2:

O Jehovah, how many are my foes!
Many are rising up against me;
Of me many are saying:
'For him there is no help.'

A third type is the introverted or enveloped parallelism in which the first and last lines are closely parallel to each other and the intervening lines expand the thought of the first. This type is, therefore, a combination of the synonymous and synthetic parallelism. A good illustration is found in Psalm 30⁸⁻¹⁰:

Intro-
verted parallel-
ism

To thee, O Jehovah, I call and make supplication;
What profit is there in my blood when I go down to the pit?
Can the dust give thee praise, make known thy faithfulness?
Oh hear and be gracious, become to me a helper.

INTRODUCTION

Strophes
and refrains

A third type of rhythm frequently employed with great effectiveness by the Hebrew poets may be designated as the strophic, in which each succeeding stanza of a poem repeated in different form or else expanded the thought of the preceding stanzas. Clear examples of this type of rhythm are found in Amos 4⁶⁻¹¹, where each stanza of four lines repeats the same note of warning and ends with the powerful refrain:

Yet ye have not returned to me, is the oracle of Jehovah.

In Isaiah 9⁸-10⁴, with its original conclusion, now incorporated in 5²⁶⁻²⁹, 25⁶, f, is found a powerful poem describing Jehovah's successive judgments upon lawless Israel. It consists of five strophes, each containing fourteen lines and ending in the dramatic words:

For all this his anger is not turned away,
And his hand is outstretched still.

Similarly, Psalms 42 and 43 originally constituted one poem of three stanzas, each with the concluding formula (found in 42⁵, 11, 43⁵):

Why art thou cast down, O my soul,
And why art thou disquieted within me?
Hope thou in God, for I shall yet praise him,
Who is the help of my countenance and my guide.

Rhythm
strophe

The strophic arrangement of the verses was exceedingly common, especially in the later poetry. Frequently it has been obscured by the additions of later scribes. It was not, however, a universal characteristic of Hebrew poetry, and the attempt of certain modern scholars to restore all Hebrew poetry to this strophic form is both misleading and disastrous, for to carry through this theory they are often forced to delete many words and sentences which are clearly original and to disregard the logical connection of the thought and the literary unity of the whole. The Hebrew poets, as a rule, refused to be bound by the bonds of an exact strophic structure. To them the clear, forceful expression of their message was far more important than its external form. Although the thought of the earlier Hebrew poets is rarely confined to the narrow limitations of a strophic structure, there is usually a rhythmic parallelism which binds together the succeeding stanzas and greatly increases the clarity and effectiveness of their poems.

Occasional
characteristics

The ordinary rhyme employed in modern English and German poetry, which is the recurrence of the same sound at the end of succeeding lines, was not a fundamental but only an occasional characteristic of Hebrew poetry. The clearest illustrations are found in the snatches of popular song preserved in the book of Judges. The riddle propounded by Samson at his bridal feast is a rhyme which has been felicitously translated by Professor Moore:

Out of the eater came something to eat,
And out of the strong came something sweet.

GENERAL CHARACTERISTICS OF HEBREW POETRY

Samson's reply to the Philistines, when they had found out through his wife the answer to his riddle, ends in the two Hebrew words eglatî and hidathî, and may be rendered:

If with my heifer you did not plow,
You had not solved my riddle, now!

The song, which is attributed to Samson's foes, also contains four rhyming words in three succeeding lines that may be rendered:

Our god has brought low,—
Under our sway, our foe,
He who wrought our country's woe,
Who slew many of us at a blow.

The closing words of Psalm 6 and of Job 10⁹⁻¹⁸ also rhyme; but outside of these few examples this external characteristic is found very rarely in Hebrew poetry. It was apparently confined to the popular songs and was regarded as undesirable by Israel's great poets.

More common in the prophets is assonance or paronomasia. Isaiah makes an effective play on the similar sounds of the two Hebrew words mishpāt and mispāh and ḡedākā and ḡē'ākā, which may be rendered:

Asso-
nance
and paro-nomasia

He looked for justice, but beheld injustice,
For redress, but beheld a cry of distress. (Is. 57.)

Amos also, in the vision recorded in 8¹⁻², plays upon the meaning of similarly sounding words (kāyīṣ and kēṣ), the one meaning summer fruit and the other end. More common in the later poetry, but more artificial, was the acrostic. Thus, for example, in Nahum 1, in the first four chapters of Lamentations, and in many psalms, as, for example, Psalm 119, each succeeding line or group of lines begins with a succeeding letter of the Hebrew alphabet.

To the modern Western reader the charm of Hebrew poetry is found not in its external form but in its innate literary characteristics. As a rule, it is highly subjective in content but objective and concrete in its form of expression. The inner feelings of the poet are vividly pictured by means of illustrations drawn from the realm of nature or from common physical experiences. The picturesque Hebrew language, in which each word suggests a familiar picture or feeling or action, lent itself readily to the poet's use. The lack of abstract terms also compelled him to express himself concretely. Expressing his emotions in the terms of physical sensations, the Hebrew poet with true psychological skill was able to arouse the same emotions in the minds of his hearers. These sensations were also elemental and therefore limited to no race or age. The result is that to-day, in reading the psalms, we not only grasp the thought of the psalmist but also feel with him the fear or the passion or the joy that stirred his soul as he wrote.

INTRODUCTION

Hebrew poetry is also characterized by its spontaneity and earnestness. The Semitic mind is naturally intense, and the painful experiences through which the Israelites passed emphasized this characteristic. The attention of the reader is quickly attracted and constantly held by the sheer power of the poet's earnestness. Frequent changes in speaker and point of view impart to Hebrew poetry a strong dramatic quality. At the same time it is vivid and graphic. The Hebrew poets are keenly alive to the importance of variety and contrast. They are always simple but rarely if ever descend to the trite and commonplace. The clearness of their thought is not impeded by cumbersome phrases or unfamiliar illustrations. As a rule, their style is sententious. Instead of piling clause upon clause, they prefer the simple couplet. In this respect their style resembles that of the Semitic story-tellers, who constantly depend upon the simple connective and rather than upon the more elaborate conjunctions. Above all, the Hebrew poets confine themselves largely to themes of common human interest. They dramatically portray, in language simple, vivid, and concrete, the vital experiences shared by all mankind. Above all, they are inspired by a noble yet practical moral purpose that enables them to satisfy elemental needs. It is not strange that Hebrew poetry has attracted and held the attention of all classes as no other literature known to man.

II

THE DIFFERENT TYPES OF HEBREW POETRY

It is significant that more than half of the literature that has come down from the early Hebrews is poetry. There are many reasons why their greatest writers were poets. To the Greeks the world of nature was not attractive, and there are comparatively few allusions to it in the literature of that race. The Hebrews, however, were in closest touch with nature, and the picturesque, varied land of Palestine spoke inspiringly to its early inhabitants. Above all, the Hebrews saw in nature the external manifestations of Jehovah's character. The fructifying rains, the destructive storms, the droughts, the locust plagues, in fact, all the striking phenomena of their widely diversified land, were believed by the Hebrews to come directly from Jehovah. Nearly every hilltop was crowned by a sanctuary where the early inhabitants worshipped the God of the mountains and the hills. The trees were the symbol of his life-giving power and of his everlasting care. Each gushing spring testified to his gracious provision for the needs of his creatures. All nature spoke to them of God and hence inspired them with emotions of reverence and trust and gratitude.

Reasons why the Hebrews were a race of poets

The ancestors of the Hebrews came from the stern life of the desert, which developed a constant sense of dependence and intense loyalty to the God of the tribe and nation. Hence they and their descendants were by nature and training deeply religious. And religion (in its larger meaning) is the most powerful force that can stir the heart of the poet. The perilous, war-like life of the Hebrews in Palestine also constantly fostered and further developed their sense of constant dependence upon Jehovah and the habit of attributing every event in their history to his direct intervention. The tragic, harrowing experiences that came to them during the later centuries aroused within them the deepest emotions of which man is capable, and thus inspired and practically compelled them to express their thoughts and feelings in poetry. The liturgical demands of the later ritual also led the faithful Jews who gathered about the second temple to voice their experiences in the psalms which are found in the Psalter. Thus, throughout all of Israel's history, most of the forces which produce poetry were actively at work.

Prominence of the religious element

Three fairly well-defined periods may be distinguished in the development of classic Hebrew poetry. The first is the age of popular songs. It begins with the entrance of the Hebrews into Canaan, about 1150, and extends to the period of Amos, about 750 B.C. The second is the prophetic period, which begins with Amos in 750 and ends with the work of the second Isaiah, about 450 B.C. The third is the age of devotional and wisdom poetry. It begins about 450, to which date may be assigned the main poetical sections of the books of Job, and extends to about 50 B.C., when the apocryphal book known as the Wisdom of Solomon was probably written. The poetical books of the Old Testament, therefore, represent a period of at least eleven centuries. They are clearly the work of scores of different writers. Certain of the songs found in Genesis and Numbers, as, for example, the so-called Song of Lamech in Genesis 4 and the Song of the Well in Numbers 21¹⁷⁻¹⁸, come in all probability from the early nomadic period preceding the entrance of the Israelites into Canaan.

INTRODUCTION

Early folk-songs

The few folk-songs and early poems that have been preserved in the historical books of the Old Testament suffice to suggest the character of this once extensive poetic literature. Evidently all the important events in the early life of the Hebrews were celebrated with songs and music. Although the Song of Songs itself is late, it has preserved a group of popular poems that were apparently sung in connection with the wedding festivals. They are in many ways the best representatives of the popular poetry of ancient Israel. Similarly, songs were sung in connection with national calamities and beside the bier of the dead. Many of these dirges have been preserved. Amos 6³ also contains a reference to the songs that were sung in connection with the banquets given by the voluptuous nobles of northern Israel. The Song of the Well in Numbers 21 is evidently a type of the popular songs that were composed by the local poets on the occasion of any important event in the life of a tribe or the nation. Isaiah 14⁴ and 23¹⁶ contain examples of the taunt songs that were sung over a fallen enemy or to cast disgrace upon a private or public foe. Great deliverances like that of the exodus, or victories like that of the Hebrews beside the Kishon, inspired the poets to sing of the achievements of their heroes. These songs appear to have been chanted by the women, as in the days of David, when the victorious warriors returned from battle laden with spoils. Scattered through the historical books there are also many priestly oracles, such as that attributed to Jacob in Genesis 49, and public prayers, like that of Solomon at the dedication of the temple, now found in the Greek versions of I Kings 8^{12, 13}. Their original poetic form is still retained and they all testify to the prominent place that poetry held in the early life of the Israelites.

Ancient
bards
and song-
books

Numbers 21²⁷ and II Samuel 19³⁵ contain references to a class of bards or singers who doubtless composed many of these songs and preserved in oral form those which had been handed down from preceding generations. They correspond to the similar class of singers who are still found among the Arabs of the desert and who recite beside the camp-fires the songs that tell of the adventures of the tribe and the achievements of its popular heroes. In I Samuel 25²⁸ there is a reference to the Book of the Wars of Jehovah which is evidently a collection of songs recording the victories won by the Israelites in the name of Jehovah. A similar collection of ancient songs, which has unfortunately been lost, was the Book of Jasher; that is, The Book of the Upright. Jasher is evidently a popular designation of the nation, Israel. The quotations (e. g., Josh. 10^{13b}, II Sam. 1¹⁸, I Kgs. 8⁵³, Gk.) indicate that these poems dealt with important events in Israel's history, such as David's lament over the death of Saul and Jonathan or Solomon's prayer at the dedication of the temple. These references and quotations also suggest the wide variety and extent of the popular Hebrew poetry, most of which has, unfortunately, been forever lost.

The character and content of the prophetic poetry which comes from the second period of Israel's literary history have already been discussed in Volume III. The poetic addresses of the prophets were the natural outgrowth of the early oracles which appear to have been invariably cast in poetic form. In presenting their messages the prophets used almost every type of poetry known to the Hebrew. With the exception of portions of Ezekiel, Haggai, and Zechariah, their original oral prophecies were always put in the form of poetry. By them the lyrical note, which was struck by the earlier prophets, was still further developed and the foundations laid for that still wider development of lyrical poetry which characterized the third period of Israel's literary history. Doubtless, during the same prophetic period many of the proverbs and some of the psalms, which have ultimately found a place in the book of Proverbs and the Psalter, were current on the lips of the people. It was this second prophetic period of Israel's history that gave to the race the ideas and the impulses which found expression in the retrospective and didactic literature of the third period.

brew
poetry

During the third period Israel's poetry assumed two distinct forms. The lyrical group is represented by the Psalter, the occasional psalms in the first book of Maccabees, in the concluding chapters of Ben Sira, and in the Psalter of Solomon. This group reflects the experiences, the emotions, and the aspirations of the Jewish race and of the different classes within Judaism. The other group includes the gnomic or wisdom literature found in Proverbs, portions of Ecclesiastes, Ben Sira, the Wisdom of Solomon, and in the crowning work of the Hebrew sages—the book of Job. It is the result of the earnest desire of Israel's latest teachers to make practical and effective in the life of their own and succeeding generations that which was best in the moral and religious experiences of the past and most vital in the teachings of earlier priests and prophets.

The
poetry
of the third period

The drama was not a product of the Semitic mind. Thus far no drama has been found in the literatures of ancient Babylonia and Egypt. The Hebrew prophets, in their poetic addresses, frequently employed dialogue. Ezekiel reveals great dramatic qualities, and one of the chief charms of Hebrew literature is its dramatic character; but the Israelites produced no pure drama. The book of Job is the nearest approximation to it, yet its action and progress are subjective rather than objective. Furthermore, the Old Testament contains no clear example of an epic. The song of Deborah has many epic qualities, but it is more than mere poetic presentation, for through it all runs a large lyric element. Its brevity also forbids its classification as a pure epic, for less than twenty verses are devoted to heroic narration. The epic, however, was not foreign to the Semitic mind. One of the earliest and noblest examples of early Babylonian literature is the so-called epic of Gilgamesh, which in a series of twelve cantos tells of the various deeds of the traditional hero Gilgamesh, who was the prototype of the Greek Hercules. The marked epic character of Israel's early narratives, the frequent references to older poetic sources, and the fact that the prose narrators at many points quote from early poetic sources favor, although they do not absolutely prove, that the Hebrews once possessed a great epic which described in connected form the earlier events in their national history and the deeds of their great heroes. Fortunately, we possess the prose (which may have been the original and only) version of that national epic.

Reasons why the lyric overshadowed all other types of Hebrew poetry

The most characteristic product of Hebrew poetic genius is the lyric. This type of poetry was originally intended to be sung to the accompaniment of a musical instrument, and expresses the individual emotions of the poet or of those for whom he speaks. Like most Semitic poetry, it is highly subjective, although its figures are often exceedingly concrete. The dominance of the lyric note in Hebrew literature is due to a variety of causes. It was primarily owing to the peculiar genius of the race. The Hebrews were pre-eminently individualists. The personal and racial points of view are prominent in all of their early writings. The extremely simple structure of the Hebrew language also favors the lyric rather than the more complex forms of poetry. Furthermore, as has been noted, the chief motive in their life was religion, and the lyric is the most natural expression of religious feeling. The great crises through which the Hebrews passed and the many painful experiences which came to them aroused the deepest personal emotions and intensified their tendency to develop the lyric.

While this type of poetry is distinctly individualistic, there is also a strong universalistic note running through the lyric poetry of the Old Testament. It is, in part, because the experiences of Israel's poets were common to the human race. In the psalms many chords are struck which find a quick response in the heart of man in every age and race. The result is that in much of the lyric poetry of the Old Testament there is a timeless quality which expresses the universal experiences and emotions of humanity.

The grouping of the Hebrew lyrics

The lyric poetry of the Old Testament represents the work of many different poets who wrote under the impulse of a great variety of emotions and in widely separated periods in Israel's history. The oldest as well as the latest poems in the Old Testament are lyrics. In their present form they are either scattered through the historical books or else massed together in the Psalter without any definite system of arrangement. In order to utilize them for reading, study, or even devotional purposes, it is important that they be classified. The primary need is to group together those poems which are written from the same point of view and with kindred aims. The first canon of classification, therefore, is that of authorship. Each of the three great groups of Israel's teachers, the prophets, the priests, and the sages, contributed certain of the lyric poems now found in the Psalter. Most of the lyric poems fall under one of the three heads, prophetic, priestly, or didactic. A still more fundamental canon in the classification of lyric poetry is the dominant emotion, whether it be that of exultation or aspiration, as in certain of the early tribal songs; or of sadness, as in the dirges found in the book of Lamentations; or of thanksgiving, of praise, of adoration, of penitence, or of worship, as in the different psalms of the Psalter. A few psalms reflect a wide variety of emotions, but the great majority may be readily classified in accordance with this canon.

Before the exile the chief note in Israel's life was either the pride or aspiration of the tribe or nation. After the exile the Jews for four centuries turned from their narrow national ambitions and from trust in their own resources to Jehovah as their one source of joy, glory, and deliverance. As the nation went down in ruin the individual for the first time emerged into prominence. The result is that the personal note becomes ever clearer in the poetry that comes from the four centuries beginning with the Babylonian exile. Adoration, praise, and thanksgiving, expressive of triumph not of the sword but of faith, or else the note of penitence and fervent petition, filled the hearts and found expression through the lips and pens of the faithful who worshipped at the second temple. This unmistakable trend from the national to the individual point of view suggests the canon to be followed in determining the order of the larger groups of poems. Within each group it is also important to arrange the poems, as far as possible, in their chronological order, thus furnishing a basis for an historical study of the different phases in the development of Israel's faith.

The trend from the national to the individual point of view

The oldest group of Hebrew lyrics are the folk or national songs. These fall naturally into four general divisions: (1) triumphal odes, (2) traditional oracles, (3) dirges, and (4) love and wedding songs. The triumphal odes were sometimes sung by the warriors but in early Israel more commonly by the women after a great deliverance, like that of the exodus, or a great victory, as that over the Canaanites beside the Kishon. They preserved in this popular, poetic form the memory of the great events and achievements in Israel's history and, therefore, have found a place among Israel's historical records. Out of these triumphal odes there developed, under the changed conditions which resulted from the Babylonian exile, the imprecatory psalms in which the inherited hatred and the burning sense of injustice with which the Jews regarded their heathen persecutors found fervent and often to us repulsive expression. Out of the older triumphal odes also developed the hymns of praise, thanksgiving, and adoration addressed to Jehovah by his afflicted yet trusting people. A third group included the majestic psalms describing Jehovah's leadership of his people in the past and the way in which he had delivered them from their foes. Through many of these runs the spirit of the old triumphal odes, even though the victories which they commemorate took place centuries before.

The triumphal odes

Another early form of Hebrew lyric poetry may be designated as the traditional oracle. In these poems the experiences and aspirations of later generations were put in the mouths of the early fathers and leaders of the race, such as Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and Moses. These memories and hopes were cast in the characteristic poetic form of the ancient prophetic oracles. Many such traditional oracles are incorporated in the historical books. Most of them are older than their prose setting. Out of these grew in later times the great oral prophecies of the pre-exilic period and the psalms which embody the messianic hopes of the exilic and post-exilic periods. The

The traditional oracles

INTRODUCTION

Jewish apocalypses, as, for example, those in the second part of the book of Daniel, are still later modifications and expansions (but in prose form) of the earlier oracles.

The dirge

The third primitive type of lyric poetry is the dirge. Public lamentations for the dead may be traced back to the beginnings of Semitic history. In the days of the ancient Sumerian king Gudea professional mourners were employed to sing songs of lament over the bier of the dead. They were probably connected with the temples. One class was known as the wailers, another as the howlers. They included both men and women. These lamentations were usually accompanied by music. The plaintive music of the harp and flute was best suited to the spirit of these dirges. The song of lament and the praise of the departed were voiced by the leader, while the chorus joined in the refrain. In the famous old Babylonian epic the hero Gilgamesh laments over his dead friend Eabani:

Thou takest no part in the noble feast,
To the assembly they call thee not.
Thou liftest not the bow from the ground;
What is hit by the bow is not for thee;
Thy hand grasps not the club nor strikes the prey,
Nor stretches thy foemen dead on the earth.
The wife thou lovest thou kissest not,
The wife thou hatest thou strikest not.
The child thou lovest thou kissest not,
The child thou hatest thou strikest not.
The might of the earth has swallowed thee.
O Darkness, Darkness, Mother Darkness!
Thou enfolded him like a mantle,
Like a deep well thou enclosest him!

The Hebrew mourning customs

The Hebrew mourning customs apparently preserved those which had been followed for thousands of years in the ancient Semitic world and still prevail in the lands of the East. The relatives of the deceased, and especially the hired mourners, were clad in sackcloth made from the hair of goats or camels (II Sam. 21¹⁰, Is. 15³). With dishevelled locks, with bare feet and legs, often cutting their hair and mutilating their features, they threw themselves down beside the dead or else sat on the ground casting dust upon their heads (II Sam. 15³⁰, Is. 3²⁸, Jer. 16⁶). Among these Hebrews the majority of these hired mourners were women, although male mourners are mentioned (Jer. 9¹⁷, II Chr. 35²⁵). Ordinarily, the mourners fasted during the daytime (I Sam. 31¹³, II Sam. 3³⁵). At sunset the funeral feast was held. The wild shrieks and weird cries uttered by the hired mourners in the East to-day make vivid the scenes about the graves of the dead in ancient Israel.

Their psychological basis

In the old Babylonian epic the laments of Gilgamesh secured immortality for his friend Eabani; but this does not appear to have been the original psychological basis of the death dirge. Not until the later Jewish period did the belief in individual immortality gain acceptance even among the Israelites. It is more probable that in earliest days the cries of the mourners were intended to placate or keep away the spirits of the dead. This reason well explains the cutting of the beard and the mutilating of the body. The heathen origin of these rites explains why they were prohibited by the later Jewish law (Lev. 19²⁷, 28). It is possible, however, that, as among many peoples to-day, the belief prevailed that the spirit of the dead lingered for a time near the body of the deceased and that offerings presented to it and songs sung in his honor gave joy to the departed. In modern Palestine the tombs of Moslem saints are often covered with gifts presented by their descendants or by the natives who venerate the sacred spot. In the biblical laments that have been preserved the chief motive seems to be to commemorate the achievements of the fallen hero or to express the sorrow of the friends who survive. The emotional Oriental undoubtedly finds great relief and a certain melancholy pleasure in these dramatic expressions of his grief.

Two kinds of dirges are found in the Old Testament. In the one an individual hero is the object of the poet's grief; in the other a city or nation. The oldest and in many ways the noblest example of the Hebrew lament is the dirge which David sang over Saul and Jonathan. It opens with a stanza in the quick, two-beat measure which gradually rises to the three and four beat and describes the greatness of the calamity that had befallen Israel. The royal poet David then goes on to describe the bravery, attractiveness, and achievements of the fallen heroes. Through it all runs the recurring refrain:

The two
dirges

How have the mighty fallen!

The dirge which David sang over Abner represents even more closely the popular lament which the hired mourners crooned over the body of the dead. In Jeremiah 22¹⁰ the prophet laments in the same way over the exiled Jehoiachaz, whose fate he likens to that of the dead. The late tradition in II Chronicles 34²⁵ states that Jeremiah lamented for Josiah and that all the singing men and singing women to this day speak of Josiah in their dirges. In Ezekiel 32²⁻¹⁰ this priest-prophet of the exile sings a dirge, which is in reality a taunt song, over the Egyptian Pharaoh. The earliest example of the lament over the nation is the dramatic dirge sung by Amos over northern Israel whose coming downfall he thus vividly portrayed (Am. 5¹⁻²). Jeremiah, in the same spirit, puts a dirge in the mouth of the singing women of Judah (Jer. 9¹⁷⁻²²). Later, in 12⁷⁻¹², he laments over the approaching fate of sinful Judah. The prophetic books contain many taunt songs in the form of dirges addressed by the prophet to Israel's hostile foes. Of these the stirring poem in Isaiah 14⁴⁻²⁰, describing the fall of Babylon, Ezekiel's picturesque dirges over the fall of Tyre in chapters 26-28, and the taunt songs over the Philistines, Moabites, Ammonites, Edomites, Damascus, the Arabians and even the distant Elamites in Jeremiah 47-49, are the most important. To this group belong the five songs of lamentation now preserved in the book of Lamentations, which represent the culmination of this strong elegiac tendency in Israel's thought and literature.

III

THE STRUCTURE AND AUTHORSHIP OF THE BOOK OF LAMENTATIONS

Aim

THE book of Lamentations is the most conventional and stereotyped of all the Old Testament writings. Four of its five chapters consist of acrostics in which each succeeding verse or group of verses begins with a succeeding letter of the Hebrew alphabet. Even though the fifth chapter is not an acrostic, it has twenty-two verses corresponding to the number of letters in the Hebrew alphabet. In the first and second chapters each verse contains three lines, in the fourth a couplet of but two lines. These rigid limitations in structure necessarily impede the free development of the thought. While these dirges lack the freedom and spontaneity of many other Hebrew poems they are not deficient in strong emotion and contain a remarkably vivid portrayal of the incidents and experiences connected with the destruction of Jerusalem. The poet's reason for employing the acrostic structure was evidently to aid the memory. His motive in writing was liturgical, that is, to furnish hymns that might be readily remembered and chanted, probably in connection with the fasts which were observed in commemoration of the destruction of Jerusalem and of the temple. In the seventh chapter of Zechariah the prophet refers to such fasts which in his day had already been observed for seventy years, beginning with the destruction of the temple in 586 B.C. In form and content these poems were well adapted to this liturgical use. They kept alive in vivid form the memories of Israel's tragic experience. They aimed to impress upon the minds of the people the lessons taught by their past, "lest they forget." They also aimed to interpret the meaning of those experiences and to justify Jehovah's rigorous dealing with his people, and thus to arouse in the heart of the nation faith and adoration even in the presence of overwhelming calamity. To the historian they are of inestimable value, for they reveal the soul of the race and give contemporary pictures of conditions in Jerusalem in the days preceding and following its overthrow regarding which Israel's historians are almost silent.

The position of the book of Lamentations in the English Bible is due to the influence of a tradition preserved in the superscription to the Greek text of Lamentations: And it came to pass after Israel had been led captive and Jerusalem laid desolate that Jeremiah sat down weeping and lifted up this lament over Jerusalem. The tradition that Jeremiah was the author of Lamentations may be traced back to the Greek period in the statement of the Chronicler (II Chr. 35²⁵): And Jeremiah sang a song of lamentation for Josiah, and all the singing men and women speak of Josiah in their lamentations to this day. And they made them a custom in Israel, and now they are written in Lamentations. The tradition that Jeremiah was the author of the book of Lamentations was probably suggested by the fact that of all the great Hebrew prophets Jeremiah alone was present to witness the closing scene in Judah's death agony. He also, more frequently than any other prophet, interspersed his prophecies with dirges. His favorite metre was the five-beat, which, since the days of Amos, had been the customary lamentation metre. Many of the expressions and ideas in Lamentations are peculiar to Jeremiah, indicating that, if he did not write these poems, he at least exerted a strong influence upon the thought of those who composed them, so that there is a real underlying basis for the tradition.

The evidence that Jeremiah was not the author of Lamentations is, however, cumulative and on the whole conclusive. It is almost inconceivable that one who so frequently disregarded the rules of Hebrew metre would allow himself to be bound by the artificial limitations of the acrostic. Many of the teachings in Lamentations are also contrary to those of Jeremiah, as, for example, the explanation of the calamities which overtook his nation (cf. 5⁷) or the estimate of Judah's last king, Zedekiah. (Cf., e. g., 2⁹, 4¹⁷, 18, 20.) They reflect rather the popular attitude toward the great catastrophe. Many of the characteristic phrases of Ezekiel are woven into these dirges, indicating that their authors were acquainted with the priest-prophet of the exile. Certain of the poems also reflect later situations and points of view. The variations in the order of the letters in the Hebrew alphabet and in the literary style and excellence of the different chapters point clearly to at least two or three different authors.

Chapters 2 and 4 are the oldest poems in the book and probably come from the same author. Each reveals an intimate familiarity with the tragic events attending the final destruction of the city and temple. The emotions of the author are so strong that they overcome the regular limitations of the acrostic structure. They reflect the feeling of astonishment and stupefaction with which the survivors regarded the great catastrophe. The insane hunger of the women, the helpless misery of the children, the shameless indignities heaped upon the rulers of Judah are portrayed with remarkable vividness and fidelity. The influence of Ezekiel may also be clearly recognized in these chapters. (Cf. 2¹⁴ and Ezek. 22²⁸.) The downfall of the state is attributed to the misleading teachings of the mercenary priests and prophets. The same unusual order of letters of the Hebrew alphabet is followed in both poems, while in 1 that which became the later order is followed. These poems were probably written in Judah some time between the destruction of Jerusalem in 586 and the liberation of Jehoiachin in 561 B.C., by one who was intimately acquainted with Zedekiah's fatal policy (2¹⁷), and was also a devoted supporter of the ill-fated king (4²⁰). They are, therefore, the best contemporary records that we have regarding the experiences and feelings of the Jews in the opening decades of the Babylonian exile.

ter 1

The poem in chapter 1 is an acrostic in which each succeeding letter of the alphabet is followed by three lines. It has the usual order of the Hebrew alphabet. It vividly pictures the woes following the destruction of Jerusalem. While the feeling and language are less spontaneous than in 2 and 4, it is full of genuine pathos. It strikes many notes which run through the psalms. Jerusalem, however, is no longer entirely without inhabitants, as was probably the case in the days immediately following its destruction by the Chaldeans. The day of Jerusalem's great calamity is already a memory of the past (?) and the description of that event lacks the vividness of chapters 2 and 4. The pitiable lot of those who had come back to live on its ruined site is prominent in the mind of the poet. The taunting, malicious attitude of neighboring peoples is clearly reflected. The culmination of the poem is a fervent petition that Jehovah will speedily take vengeance upon these malignant foes. There is no suggestion that Cyrus had as yet conquered Babylon and granted to the Jews the privilege of rebuilding their sanctuary. The poem, therefore, comes in all probability from a Palestinian poet who wrote during the latter part of the Babylonian period, between 560 and 540 B.C.

chapter 5

Chapter 5, like 1, presents a vivid picture of the conditions in the Jewish community during the years following the destruction of Jerusalem. The memories of that event, however, are vague. It was in the days of their fathers that the nation paid the first great penalty for its guilt. For these many years (20) Jehovah has apparently forgotten and forsaken his people. The basis of the petition with which the poem concludes is that after these many years the nation has atoned for its guilt and the time has come when Jehovah should pardon and restore. In contrast with 2 and 4 the sense of national guilt is much more prominent, but there is no protestation of innocence, as in the book of Job and in the psalms which come from the middle of the Persian period. There is also no suggestion that the temple has been rebuilt or that the heavy Chaldean yoke has been removed. It is evident, therefore, that this chapter comes from about the same period as 1, that is, the latter half of the Babylonian or early in the Persian period.

ter 3

Chapter 3 differs widely from the other poems in the book of Lamentations. In thought and language it is closely connected with Zechariah, Job, II Isaiah, and many of the psalms. It lacks the spontaneous feeling and vigorous literary style of the other dirges in the book of Lamentations. Its spirit and language are those of the later psalm literature. The first part of the poem is a meditation on Israel's painful experiences in the past. The strong didactic element connects it with the reflective psalms and the work of Israel's wise men which culminated in the Greek period. The tone of this poem is deeply religious. The love and mercy of God are pictured with remarkable effectiveness and appreciation. The poem is apparently made up of fragments of psalms which have been adjusted to the acrostic structure and brought into a loose literary unity. Its dependence upon the later writings of the Old Testament is so great, and it is so far removed from the problems of the Babylonian period, that it is difficult to assign it to a date earlier than the last half of the Persian or the first part of the Greek period.

The author of chapter 3, who may have been the final editor of the book of Lamentations, evidently modelled his work after chapters 2 and 4. He has not only adopted the unusual order of the Hebrew alphabet found in these chapters but also introduced his poem between these two earlier laments. Chapter 1 was probably given its position at the beginning of the book because of its vivid description of the desolation of Jerusalem. It also furnished a fitting introduction to the book as a whole. Chapter 5 was placed at the end because even a casual reader would at once recognize that it reflected conditions a generation or two after the great catastrophe of 586 B.C. It is thus possible to trace with reasonable assurance the growth and history of the little book of Lamentations, which, though one of the shortest books of the Old Testament, represents the work of at least three different authors and reflects the thought of as many centuries. Like many of the psalms, it reflects the unassuaged sorrow but invincible faith and hope in the heart of the Jewish race. Neglected by most modern readers in the Western world, it is the book which voices the woes of the orthodox Jews, who still regard themselves as exiles without a country.

THE ORIGIN AND INTERPRETATION OF THE SONG OF SONGS

The history
of the Song of
Songs

THE Song of Songs, or, as it is known in late tradition, the Song of Solomon, is one of the latest books to be included in the canon of the Old Testament. Not only is it found in the third and latest collection of writings, but its position was questioned by the famous rabbi Aquiba as late as the first half of the second Christian century. Josephus's statement (Contra Apion 1⁸) that twenty-two books were included in the sacred scriptures of his race suggests that by the last quarter of the first Christian century the Song of Songs had already been included by common consent in the canon; but there is a significant absence of any reference to the book in the Jewish and Christian writings preceding this period. Certain references in the Mishna imply that there were some rabbis who still maintained the natural interpretation of the Song of Songs; but it was probably in the end given a place in the canon because of its allegorical interpretation and because it was associated with the name of Solomon.

Under the influence of the allegorizing tendencies current in contemporary Greek thought the Jews of Palestine as well as of the dispersion, during the centuries immediately preceding and following the beginning of the Christian era, were inclined more and more to read into the earlier scriptures deeper spiritual meanings. To this tendency the Song of Songs, with its fervid Oriental figures and its passionate feeling, readily lent itself. The result was that the ingenuity of the Jewish scribes found in it an elaborate allegorical history of the relations between Jehovah and his people from the days of the exodus to the dawn of the messianic era. Following the example of the Jewish scribes, the early Christian Fathers devoted much attention to the allegorical interpretation of the Song of Songs. Identifying Christ with the bridegroom, they regarded the bride as the representative either of the Church or else of the soul of the Christian. Huge volumes were written by such scholars as Origen, developing this allegorical interpretation. They remain as monuments to the absurd extreme to which this method leads its followers. In later generations it became a favorite occupation of different commentators to find in it new allegorical meanings. Fully a score of these different allegorical theories have been propounded, each differing from and confounding all others. The blasphemous absurdities of some of these allegorical interpretations to-day need no refutation.

Even during the period when the allegorical method of interpretation was regnant, saner scholars were found to raise their voices in protest. The brilliant and courageous Theodore of Mopsuestia, who connected the song with the Egyptian marriage of Solomon, was condemned as a heretic by the second council of Constantinople in 553 A.D., and the Church took its stand squarely on the allegorical interpretation of the book. It was not until the Protestant Reformation had unchained the Bible that scholars began again to recognize the natural, naïve character of the Song of Songs.

Its

With the recognition that the Song of Songs was an expression of human love between man and woman, two types of dramatic interpretation arose. According to the one, it is a series of dialogues between King Solomon and his peasant bride. The other dramatic theory found in it three characters: the heroine, a beautiful Shulammite maiden; her shepherd lover, to whom she remained true; and King Solomon, who sought by promises and flattery to win her affections and thus to induce her to remain in his harem. The latter theory is still held, but by a diminishing number of interpreters. It is alluring because of its highly dramatic theme and the practical moral lesson which it sets forth. Its most ardent advocates are forced, however, to confess that at many points the interpretation is based upon the ingenious suggestions of the interpreters rather than upon any definite data contained in the poem itself. Furthermore, the dramatic interpretation assumes the Western ideas and customs of love-making and ignores the fixed customs and very different ideals with which the Eastern world hedges in the institution of marriage. It fails to recognize the fact that the speeches and acts which it implies would have been impossible in an ancient Oriental kingdom, least of all under a despotic monarch like Solomon. Many of the scenes, into which this intricate Western dramatic theory divides the little book of eight chapters, do not at the most require more than a minute, if publicly presented, and the whole less than half an hour. It assumes that the concluding chapter records the Shulammite's farewell to Solomon that she may go and wed her shepherd lover; but in the heart of the book (3⁶-5¹) there are repeated references to the public wedding ceremony which imply that this had already taken place.

Later studies of the wedding customs that still prevail in Palestine and Syria and of the songs that are sung on these festal occasions leave little doubt regarding the true character and meaning of the Song of Songs. In a famous article published by the German traveller Wettstein, in Bastian's Zeitschrift für Ethnologie of 1873, a vivid description is given of the wedding ceremonies observed by the inhabitants of the regions east of Jordan and in the vicinity of Damascus. Before the marriage feast, which is held in the evening at the home of the bride's parents, there are processions and songs. The bride, attired in her wedding-garments, with sword in hand, dances before the attendant guests, who sing her charms with characteristic Oriental license. After the wedding there is a seven days' feast called the King's Week, in which the bride and groom are daily placed upon an improvised throne and saluted as king and queen. The king, having captured his bride, is acclaimed victor by the attendant guests. Songs are sung in turn by the bride and groom and their friends, describing in detail and without reserve the physical charms of the pretended king and queen. The bride is acclaimed the fairest among women and for a brief time she tastes the joys of regal pomp.

Significance of the historic allusions in the Song of Songs

This custom evidently explains the otherwise obscure references to Solomon and the Shulammite. As Budde has truly said, the historic Solomon figures no more in the Song of Songs than in the Sermon on the Mount, where the lilies are said to be more beautiful than Solomon in all his glory (Mt. 6²⁹). He is simply the grand monarch who in later Oriental tradition was the superlative type of royal magnificence. Thus in 1⁵ the sunburnt Shulammite is likened to the curtains of Solomon; in 3⁷ the palanquin upon which the bridegroom is borne on his wedding-day is called the litter of Solomon. In memory of Israel's early glories the attendants of the bride are, in 3¹¹, called daughters of Jerusalem and the bridegroom is addressed as King Solomon. In 6⁸ the simple love of the bride and groom is contrasted with the artificial splendor of Solomon's harem. In 8^{11, 12} the bride contentedly compares her humble lot with Solomon's wealth and magnificence. Similarly, the term Shulammite is used interchangeably with the phrase the most beautiful of women. It is clearly equivalent to the modern title queen that is applied to the peasant bride during her wedding week. It was apparently suggested by the story of Abishag the Shulammite, the fairest maiden of Israel, who was chosen as the consort of David in his old age, and whom, later, Adonijah, the king's oldest son, sought, at the cost of his life, to make his bride (I Kgs. 1³, 2¹³⁻²⁵). The popular story regarding Abishag was well calculated to make a profound impression upon the minds of the peasants of Palestine. Such passages as 1^{4, 12} and 6⁵ imply that the heroine of the Song of Songs was for the time treated as a queen. In the opening chapter the contrast between the transcendent beauty and royal honors attributed to her by her attendants and her own peasant features and simple tastes is the dominant motif.

Biblical references to marriage customs

The Bible contains few references to the details of the ancient Hebrew marriage ceremony. The two famous marriages recorded in the Old Testament are those of Jacob in Genesis 29 and of Samson in Judges 14. In each case the wedding-feast was held in the home of the bride. The culmination of the marriage ceremony was the leading home of the bride by the bridegroom. From Genesis 29⁵ it may be inferred that the Hebrew bride was veiled. Both the bride and the bridegroom were accompanied by attendant friends. Jeremiah 7³⁴ refers to the voice of the bridegroom and the voice of the bride, implying that in ancient times, as to-day, they joined with their friends in the wedding-songs which were then sung.

Modern Palestinian wedding-songs

Dalman, in his Palästinischer Diwan, has confirmed and supplemented the data earlier collected by Wettstein regarding the Palestinian wedding customs. On the day preceding the wedding-feast the bride comes out from her home dressed in her wedding-garments, bearing two torches in her hand, and sings certain songs in which the attendant maidens and occasionally the bridegroom respond or take up the refrain. At certain points one female singer joins in and the chorus repeats the verse. Two versions of this antenuptial bride song or parade song, as it is called, have been preserved (Dalman, 254-261). The Nazareth version, in which the attendant guests first speak, may be translated as follows:

Attendants :

March hither, in the name of God, thou Fair One,
Thou rose in the garden of flowers!
The carnation blossom, O bride,
And the jasmin o'ershadow us.

Stand up. Mount thy throne;⁷
The doves coo to thee,
The queen herself ministers to thee,
Thou Arab maiden, thou fair one!

Stand up! go into the guest room.
See, what does thy bridegroom lack!
O my lord, he increases his wealth
That he may liberally give thee the purse of gold.

Bridegroom :

She went past me with Egyptian earrings,
All the fish of the sea bestir themselves;
I will bring thee to my breast,
And lay thee to sleep on the heavenly bed.

Attendants :

When they came to bring thee,
They set thee on the wagon;
They paid a hundred lira to thy father, O thou bride!
O thou bride, thou fair one!

Bridegroom :

Stand up and come to me,
Thou with the rose red garment,
By the life of thy distinguished father
O bride, as thou marchest about.

Attendants :

She puts on the wooden shoes to walk about,
In order to walk about until she eats at night—
'By the life of my father I eat not Without a great number of songs.'

Bridegroom :

Remain standing proudly before me,
O sweet one, thou hast disturbed my mind.
And the gain—thou art my possession,
O thou bride, O my eyes!

INTRODUCTION

Attendants :

The daughter of nobles marches about
With two kindled torches—
Rise up. Mount thy high throne,
By the life of thy esteemed father.

Bride :

By the life of my father I go not up
Without eight maid-servants :
Two on account of the fashion,
Two on account of the room,
Two to loosen my buttons,
Two for the heavenly bed.

Songs
sung by the bride's attendants

Similar songs are sung by the attendants when the bride is given to the groom and also when the bridegroom receives the bride. The one sung by two of the wedding guests when the bride is given to the groom concludes with the words :

When thou goest into the garden of flowers, sittest in thy happiness.
By God, think of us and we will not forget thee.

Songs are also sung as the bride dances before the guests. In one song the bride sings the first half of the line, as she dances, while the chorus answers with the second half. All the attendant guests beat the time by clapping their hands.

A late collection of Hebrew love
marriage
songs

These modern wedding customs furnish the key for the interpretation of the Song of Songs. Many figures and allusions that are meaningless to the Western reader become clear in the light of still existing Oriental customs. The Hebrew text, by means of its verbal and pronominal forms, also indicates, in nearly every case, the gender of the one addressed. The Song of Songs is not a drama but a collection of love and marriage songs sung or recited in connection with the different scenes in the ancient Hebrew wedding ceremony. Apparently, they are arranged in the same general order in which they were used, although many rearrangements have been proposed by modern scholars. They were written from the same point of view and probably all put in form by the same editor. The presence of certain Aramaic, Greek, and Persian words, and the constant use of the late form of the Hebrew relative pronoun, indicate that they were probably written during the Greek period.

Suggestions of literary unity

Their dramatic form may also reflect the influence of contact with Greek literature and thought. There are suggestions throughout these songs of a certain literary unity. Thus, for example, the bride is repeatedly spoken of as a garden (e. g., 4¹², 6^{2, 3}). This figure, however, is still used in the modern Arab wedding-songs. It is also found in an ancient Egyptian song which a maiden sang to her lover. Here, however, the lover, not the bride, is likened to a garden. This Egyptian poem also suggests many other points of likeness with the Song of Songs :

ORIGIN AND INTERPRETATION OF SONG OF SONGS

I am thy favorite sister,
And thou art to me as a garden,
Which I have planted with flowers
And all kinds of fragrant herbs.
Fair is the spot, where'er we be,
If only thy hand is laid upon mine;
Pensive is our mood and happy our heart,
Because we are together.
To hear thy voice is like a draught of wine,
And to listen to thee is life to me!
To see thee is better far
To me than eating and drinking!

Throughout the Song of Songs the bridegroom is likened to King Solomon and the bride's attendants are spoken of as the daughters of Jerusalem. But this was but a part of the dramatic symbolism which characterizes even the modern Palestinian wedding. Another mark of unity is the keen appreciation of the simple beauties of nature that runs through all the songs. An allusion like that in 1⁶ to the bride's features, browned by the sun because of her life out in the vineyards, is explained in a later song (8¹²). Similar refrains recur throughout the book, as, for example, in 2¹⁷, 4⁶, and 8¹⁴. The following refrain, in slightly variant forms, concludes several of the songs (2⁷, 3⁶, 8⁴):

I adjure you, O daughters of Jerusalem,
By the gazelles or by the hinds of the field,
That you stir not up nor awaken love until it please.

In the opening section (1²–3⁵) the bride is apparently in her home surrounded by her attendant maidens, who are probably aiding her in preparing for the coming wedding ceremony. Then she receives a visit from her plighted lover. The bride frankly expresses her love and yearnings for him and for the joys of marriage, while her attendants at times join with her. During the recital the bride recalls certain of the scenes that preceded the open plighting of her love, as, for example, in 2³⁻⁶, 8-17, and sings certain songs which are love poems rather than mere wedding-songs. Oriental customs give little or no opportunity for the open expression of love except on the eve of the wedding ceremony. Then the bride is not only free but is expected to express without restraint and in superlative terms the character and intensity of the love which she feels for the man who is soon to become her husband. In the East, where the parents of the bride and groom arrange all the preliminaries of the marriage, this is the Oriental equivalent of the Occidental period of courtship.

The song in 3⁶⁻¹¹ is evidently sung by the wedding guests and proclaims the approach of the bridegroom to his bride. He is likened to Solomon and is surrounded by his male friends who, in keeping with the dramatic representation, are called mighty warriors. The song in 4¹⁻⁵ voices the bridegroom's praise of his bride and culminates in the public plighting of their troth. In the next scene (5²-6³) the bride is apparently again alone with her companions, and she describes in characteristic Oriental figures the attractions of her lover. In 6⁴-8⁴ the attendant guests unite with the bridegroom in describing the charms of the bride as she dances before them. This scene also concludes with a public avowal of her love. The last scene (8⁵-14) represents the culmination of the wedding ceremony, when the bridegroom conducts his bride to his home. At the threshold of her new life she protests her love for her husband in words unsurpassed for beauty and depth of feeling. She also glories in her tested virtue and expresses her contentment with her humble lot.

Aim
of the Song of
Songs

The aim of the author of the Song of Songs was evidently to present a ritual to be used in the wedding ceremonies that would be both noble and chaste. Doubtless he drew his material from the love and wedding songs that had long been current among the people of Palestine. Some of them may well come from the days preceding the exile, when the memory of the glories of Solomon's kingdom and the story of Abishag the Shulammitte, the fairest maiden of Israel, were still fresh in the minds of the people. Possibly the poet has preserved the songs that were actually sung at a certain wedding where he was a guest. There are personal allusions, as, for example, in 8⁵, which favor this conclusion; but in general these songs are generic; that is, they are adapted to use at any peasant wedding ceremony. While they do not adequately present the sanctity and beauty inherent in our modern ideal of marriage, for that ideal was unknown to the East, they do extol nobly and exquisitely the sanctity and beauty of true love between man and woman. Nowhere in literature has this divine passion been more beautifully described than in the words which the bride addresses to her husband as she enters his home, thereby making complete the marriage relation:

Love is as strong as death;
Jealousy is as irresistible as Sheol;
Its flames are flames of fire,
A very flame of Jehovah.
Many waters cannot quench love,
Nor can floods drown it.

Its charm and permanent value

These songs reflect the naïveté and the passion of the Eastern world and the roguishness and simplicity of the early peasant life. The simplicity of the country maiden and her contentment with her plain lot stand in strong contrast to the fulsome praise heaped upon her by her friends and attendants. The description of the charms of the bride and bridegroom are characterized by that concreteness and frankness which distinguish the Oriental poetry even of to-day from that of the Western world. The tropical luxury of the figures at times produces a jarring effect upon our Western ears, and yet in their descriptions of springtime and in their love of nature and of the simple joys of life the poems of the Song of Songs command a high place in the world's literature. While the book lacks the lofty religious teachings that characterize many of the prophetic writings, its literary beauty, its reflection of the life and customs of the early Hebrews, and its strong and effective emphasis on the importance of pure and true love between man and woman vindicate its place among those marvellous writings which aim to deal with every phase of human experience.

MUSIC AND SONG IN THE TEMPLE SERVICE

THE biblical references to music and song in connection with Israel's religion are so few that they leave scores of questions unanswered. The Hebrews, however, in their art and material civilization, followed closely the example of their more advanced neighbors on the east and west. The clearest illustrations of musical instruments that come from the Jewish race are found at Rome on the Arch of Titus, which commemorates the destruction of the Jewish state; but the Egyptian, Babylonian, and Assyrian monuments contain many suggestive pictures of music and musical instruments. These are supplemented by references in the inscriptions themselves, so that through the records of these ancient peoples it is possible to gain a reasonably definite conception of the place of music among the ancient Hebrews. On a tablet of the Sumerian king Urukagina, who lived about 3200 B.C., definite provision is made for the salary of his temple singers. Far back in the old Egyptian kingdom one of the chief court officials was the director of the royal music. Music both in Babylonia and Assyria was the almost invariable accompaniment of song. In Egypt the musicians were men, who ordinarily sang as they played. They were also frequently accompanied by women, who danced as they sang. In one ancient bas-relief the women are represented as playing on castanets and tambourines. From the famous Tell-el-Amarna letters comes a picture of a harpist accompanied by seven blind singers who are clapping their hands in Oriental fashion in order to mark time. In the tomb of Ramses III, who lived about the time of the Hebrew settlement of Canaan, two Egyptian priests are represented as playing on beautifully constructed harps with ten to twelve strings. The harp appears to have been a native Egyptian instrument. The lyre—the Egyptian name of which is practically identical with the Hebrew—was evidently an importation from Asia. On one Egyptian monument a Bedouin, with unmistakable Semitic countenance, is pictured playing on a crude lyre. Another famous Egyptian picture portrays an ancient orchestra with six players, all of whom are women; a large, standing harp with thirteen strings, a lyre, a lute, a smaller harp carried over the shoulder, and a double flute can clearly be distinguished. The sixth woman is clapping her hands to beat time. A collection of ancient Sumerian and Babylonian hymns, originally intended to be used in connection with the cult at Ur, contains this suggestive addendum:

To the temple of the god let us go with a song of petition upon a lyre,
The psalmists shall sing,

MUSIC AND SONG IN THE TEMPLE SERVICE

The psalmists a chant of lordly praise shall sing,
The psalmists a chant upon a lyre shall sing.*

On an elaborate Assyrian bas-relief coming from the reign of Ashurbanipal, the great patron of art and literature, an orchestra is portrayed consisting of twenty-six performers. The instruments include seven portable harps, one dulcimer, two double flutes, and a drum. These instruments are all played by men, but the players are accompanied by four women and nine children arranged in order of size and all clapping their hands to mark time. It is interesting to note that the members of this ancient Semitic band are represented in the act of singing, for one woman is compressing her throat with her hand, as do the modern Orientals, in order to produce the shrill, high tremolo. Another slab in the British Museum pictures Semitic captives, possibly Hebrews, playing on lyres as they march in procession before an Assyrian soldier. The picture vividly recalls the statement in Psalm 137¹⁻³ that the Hebrew captives hung their harps on the poplars as they sat weeping beside the rivers of Babylon:

Among
the Babylonians
and Assyrians

For there our captors demanded of us words of song,
They who spoiled us commanded, 'Sing for us a song of Zion.'

A few references in the Old Testament suggest the character of the musical instruments in use among the Hebrews. In Judges 11³⁴ it is stated that Jephthah's daughter came out with tambourines and dances to meet the warriors as they returned from their victories over the Ammonites. According to the ancient story in I Samuel 10^{5, 10}, Saul, after leaving Samuel, met a band of prophets with a lyre, a tambourine, a flute, and a harp. Psalm 150³⁻⁵ contains a summary of the musical instruments later employed by the Israelites in connection with their religious services:

brews

Praise him with the blast of the horn,
Praise him with the harp and lyre,
Praise him with the timbrel and dance,
Praise him with strings and pipe,
Praise him with sounding cymbals,
Praise him with clashing cymbals.

Six instruments are here mentioned by name. The horn, or trumpet, mentioned first, was probably one of the earliest musical instruments used by the Hebrews. It was simply the ram's horn adapted to musical use. It appears from the references to it that it was used chiefly in announcing the beginnings of the year of jubilee and the important festivals. Psalm 81^{2, 4} reads:

Blow the trumpet at the new moon,
At the full moon, on our feast day;
For it is a statute for Israel,
An ordinance of the God of Jacob.

* Langdon, Sum. and Bab. Hymns, 70.

INTRODUCTION

Trumpets were also blown by the priest to indicate the different stages in the temple service. The two trumpets pictured on the Arch of Titus at Rome are straight and long and have flaring, bell-like ends. They were probably made of metal. Several instruments of percussion were known to the Hebrews. The tambourine, or timbrel, was used in connection with the popular dances and in connection with religious music of the most joyous character. Psalm 81 begins:

Sing aloud to God, our strength,
Shout to the God of Jacob,
Raise a song and sound the timbrel,
The pleasant lyre with the harp.

Lyre
harp

As among the Egyptians and Babylonians, the lyre and harp were apparently the favorite instruments. There is no means of determining their exact Hebrew form except from the Assyrian bas-reliefs. The two harp-like instruments pictured on the late Jewish coins are vase-shaped, with three or four vertical strings extending from the base to a cross piece above which rests on supports rising on either side. The lyre and the harp were used only on joyful occasions, such as feasts and happy religious services. The harp among the Hebrews appears to have been consecrated almost entirely to worship. In I Chronicles 15²⁰ there is a reference to harps set to female voices. The same musical direction is found in the superscription to Psalm 46. The implication is that the harp was pitched high and used to accompany soprano voices.

Wind
instruments

Of the wind instruments, the flute is the most important. Originally it was made of reed, but later of wood bored through, as its Hebrew name indicates. There were many varieties of flutes. The more primitive had only three or four holes while the later appear to have had seven, covering the entire octave. The double flute, or Pan's pipe, was in common use among the Babylonians and Egyptians and probably among the Hebrews. The more sombre music of the flute was the common accompaniment of mourning and of the sadder and more pensive songs. There is a Jewish tradition that in the second temple there was a primitive pipe-organ provided with a leather bellows and a wind-box with ten openings. Into each of these openings a pipe with ten holes was fitted, so that it was possible to obtain from the organ one hundred distinct tones. Inasmuch as the hydraulic organ was discovered by Ctesibias about 250 B.C., it is possible that some such organ was used in the later temple.

song
in the pre-exilic temples

The picture of the Egyptian priests playing on harps implies that musical instruments were used by the people of the Nile in connection with their religious services. During the days of the new empire one of the chief functions of the Egyptian queen was to lead the female singers in the ritual. In Babylonia and Assyria most of the musicians appear to have been priests. The few allusions in the pre-exilic Old Testament records imply that from the earliest times both music and song played an important part in the religious life of the people. The band of prophets who were prophesying, that is, probably giving expression to their ecstasy in song to the accompaniment of lyre, tambourine, and harp, were coming from the high place where they had evidently been worshipping. The ancient record in II Samuel 6¹⁴ states that David was dancing (probably whirling) before Jehovah with all his might, as he with all Israel brought the ark of Jehovah to Jerusalem with shouting and the sound of the trumpet. Elisha, according to II Kings 3¹⁵, in order to prophesy, called for a minstrel, for whenever the minstrel played the power of Jehovah came upon him. The most significant statement is that of the prophet Amos, as he preached, probably on a festal occasion at the royal sanctuary at Bethel:

MUSIC AND SONG IN THE TEMPLE SERVICE

Banish from me the noise of your songs,
For to the melody of your lyres I will not listen. (5²³.)

Lamentations 2⁷ also contains the important statement:

The foreign conquerors have made a din in Jehovah's house as in the day of solemn assembly.

Clearly, music and song were both used by the Hebrews of the pre-exilic period in connection with their temple worship, but there is no evidence that there was a special class of singers. Ezekiel, in his elaborate description of the temple officials and of the temple itself, makes no reference to them or to any special provision for this part of the ritual. It is even more significant that the detailed laws of the Pentateuch contain no references to temple singers or to their support. The natural conclusion, therefore, is that there was no special class but that the singing at the pre-exilic Hebrew sanctuaries was voluntary and that the assembled worshippers as a whole participated in it. The simple music required was probably, as in Egypt and Babylonia, supplied by the priests of each sanctuary.

Isaiah 30^{29, 32}, although post-exilic, suggests the nature of the early song services in connection with the temple:

Nature
of the
service

A song shall you have on your lips, as on a night when a feast is celebrated. And you shall have gladness of heart like the one who sets forth with a flute To go to the Mount of Jehovah, to the Rock of Israel.

In the traditional account of the transfer of the ark to Jerusalem in the days of David the author of I Chronicles 15¹⁹⁻²⁴ has given a vivid picture of the musical customs in vogue at least during the Greek period when he lived: So the singers Heman, Asaph and Ethan, were to sound aloud on cymbals of brass, while other singers played on lyres set to female voices . . . and with harps set to the octave to lead. . . . And certain other priests blew the trumpet before the ark of God. In its poetic paraphrase of this tradition Psalm 68^{24, 25} completes the picture:

They have seen thy procession, O Jehovah,
The processions of my God, my King to the sanctuary;
The singers went before; behind the musicians;
In the midst maidens playing on timbrels.

INTRODUCTION

In the original text preserved in I Esdras 4⁶² it is stated that the exiles who returned after their liberation by Cyrus praised the God of their fathers . . . and exulted seven days with music and rejoicing. The fiftieth chapter of Ben Sira contains the most detailed picture of the post-exilic temple service, probably as it was observed on the day of atonement:

Then shouted the sons of Aaron,
They blew on the trumpets of beaten work,
They blew and sent forth a mighty blast,
As a remembrance before the Most High.
Then all the people together hasted,
They fell down with their faces to the ground,
To worship their Lord, the Almighty God, Most High.
The singers also praised him with their voices;
In the whole house was there made sweet melody. (15-18.)

The music
of the second temple

From these vivid descriptions and from the nature of the instruments used in connection with the Hebrew worship it is possible to draw certain definite inferences regarding the character of the music used in the services of the second temple. The music employed by the Jews to-day throws little light on the problem, for it has preserved few, if any, of the old melodies. The instruments employed and the musical terms used in the psalms indicate that Hebrew music was strident and noisy. Harmony in our modern sense was apparently unknown, even as it is to the Turks and Persians and Arabs to-day. This does not mean that Hebrew music was necessarily dissonant. A modern Arab chorus almost always sings in unison. The melody is not appreciated by an Occidental because it is rhythmical rather than harmonious. II Chronicles 5¹³ contains the suggestive statement: Both the trumpeters and the singers were as one, making one sound to praise Jehovah. This probably means that the trumpeters all played together on the same note during the pauses, while the voices sang the air in unison. The superscriptions to a few of the psalms suggest that the melody was sometimes reduplicated in octaves. As a matter of fact, the octave was known at a very early period. The religious scale was probably diatonic, each song being sung on one prevailing key. The pauses were determined by the sense of the passage. Unlike our modern chants, interpretation of the ideas was the chief end sought and the melody was entirely secondary. The monotony was still further relieved by the introduction of antiphonal or alternating choruses. Unfortunately, the directions regarding the change of speakers or choruses, if they ever existed, have been lost, so that it is necessary to infer from the contents of the psalms themselves how the different parts were intended to be rendered. Like the weird, fascinating music which is still used by certain Mohammedan sects in connection with their religious services, the music and songs of the ancient Hebrews undoubtedly made a powerful emotional impression upon the worshippers. Unlike some of our complicated modern music, it never concealed but ever aided in revealing the thoughts and feelings which it was intended to interpret, and thus served to establish the sense of a close, intimate relation between the worshippers and their God.

The prominence given to the temple singers by later Judaism is an index of the popular appreciation of the important place held by music and song in the ritual. The history of the temple singers is enveloped in much obscurity. The chief sources of information are (1) the superscriptions to the psalms, (2) the testimony of the author of Chronicles, who was himself a temple singer and intensely interested in this class, and (3) the data found in the later Jewish writings. One of the older groups of songs in the Psalter (42-49) is dedicated to the sons of Korah. These were apparently a guild of temple singers, called the sons of Korah, even as the early Hebrew priests were called the sons of Levi and the prophetic guilds the sons of the prophets. Another group of psalms, apparently coming from a little later period, are similarly dedicated to the sons of Asaph. Two later psalms (88, 89) are associated with the names of Heman and Ethan. The implication, therefore, of these superscriptions is that the oldest group of singers bore the name sons of Korah and that the other guilds came into existence, or at least into prominence, at later periods. This conclusion is in general confirmed by the writings of the Chronicler. In his version of the census of the Judean community, found in Ezra 2⁴¹ and the parallel passage in Nehemiah 7⁴⁴ and also in Nehemiah 11²², the temple singers are known simply as the sons of Asaph. These lists apparently represent conditions in the Judean community during the latter part of the Persian and the earlier part of the Greek periods. There is no evidence that the temple singers were originally drawn from the ranks of the Levites. Their membership in the musical guilds probably depended upon their inclinations and ability. In Nehemiah 10²⁸ they are ranked side by side with the porters and temple servants.

In the days of the Chronicler, however (circa 250 B.C.), the older guild of the sons of Korah had apparently disappeared and are represented simply by the sub-guild of Heman. This is directly implied by the Chronicler in I Chronicles 6³³⁻³⁷, where he makes Heman a descendant of Korah. It is also confirmed by the superscription to Psalm 88, which is classified as a psalm of the sons of Korah; but in the latter part of the superscription it is also designated as a Maskil of Heman the Ezrahite. Why the sons of Korah lost their prestige must remain a question of conjecture. According to I Chronicles 9¹⁹ and 26^{1, 19} and elsewhere in the writings of the Chronicler the Korahites were simply doorkeepers and guardians of the temple. Possibly the late priestly story in Numbers 16 regarding the rebellion of the Korahites and of the signal judgment that overtook them is the late traditional record of a rebellion of this guild of temple singers against the regular priests. These were designated in post-exilic days as the sons of Aaron, that is, the guild of priests that guarded the ark (Hebrew אֲרֹן ark). In II Chronicles 20¹⁹, however, the Chronicler speaks of the Korahites as singers, but he assigns their activity to an early period in Israel's history, thus confirming the conclusions already drawn: In the days of Jehoshaphat the Levites of the sons of the Kohathites and of the sons of the Korahites stood up to praise Jehovah the God of Israel with an exceedingly loud voice.

The Chronicler also identifies the three guilds of temple singers of his day with the Levites and in his characteristic way traces their appointment to the days of David. Thus I Chronicles 15^{16, 17} reads: David also commanded the chief of the Levites to appoint their kinsmen the singers with instruments of music, lyres, harps, and cymbals, who should raise shouts of rejoicing. So the Levites appointed Heman, the son of Joel; and of his kinsmen Asaph, the son of Berechia and of the sons of Merari, their kinsman, Ethan, the son of Kushaiah. These data indicate rather clearly the history of the temple singers during the Persian and Greek periods. The absence of any reference to them in contemporary writings and in the Pentateuch imply that they did not become prominent until the latter part of the Persian period after Nehemiah had restored the walls of Jerusalem and the priestly law associated with Ezra had been instituted. Their growing prominence was one of the results of the emphasis which the late priestly law and the leaders of the Judean community placed upon the temple and its ritual. It is contemporaneous with the growth of the Psalter and the increasing importance of the song service. The guild of the Korahites appears to have flourished during the middle and latter part of the Persian period and to have been originally distinct from the priests and Levites. Before the close of the Persian period the sons of Asaph succeeded, in part, at least, to the position and prestige at first held by the sons of Korah. Possibly the sons of Asaph, as the Chronicler states, were enlisted from the Levites. Their non-Levitical origin may explain why the sons of Korah were gradually set aside, so that by the days of the Chronicler they had no part in the song service of the temple. At least it is certain that by the middle of the Greek period the three contemporary guilds of singers known as the sons of Asaph, of Heman, and of Ethan or Jeduthun (I Chr. 25^{1, 6}) were classified as Levites and were in charge of the song service of the temple. The presence of three guilds also indicates the growing numbers and importance of this class of temple servants. In I Chronicles 24¹⁻¹⁹ and 25 the Chronicler states that, like the priests, they had become so numerous that they were divided into twenty-four courses and that each course ministered in turn at the temple while the others returned to their homes and turned their attention to other occupations. The rapidly increasing importance of music and of the singer class illustrates forcibly the growing emphasis which later Judaism placed upon the ritual and upon the expression of religion in public worship. The next step in Jewish thought was by analogy to transfer this elaborate system of song service from earth to heaven and to think of God himself as surrounded by choirs of angelic singers ever chanting his praises. Thus the dominant ritualistic tendency of later Judaism transformed and reshaped human beliefs regarding the ways in which God should be served not only on earth but also in the life beyond death.

THE LITERARY AND HISTORICAL BACKGROUND OF THE PSALTER

MODERN discovery and research have demonstrated that at least two millennia of intense human struggle and earnest religious thought lie back of the Hebrew Psalter. Centuries before the days of Moses and David the ancient Sumerians, Egyptians, and Babylonians developed a hymnology that in volume and literary form, if not in spirit and content, was startlingly like that of the Hebrews. In one ancient inscription the titles of over one hundred Sumerian and Babylonian hymns are given. These ancient hymns for public service were classified according to the musical instruments that were to be used with them. Some were to be sung with the flute, some with the lyre, and others probably with the bagpipe. The poetic structure of these ancient hymns is also clearly indicated on the clay inscriptions. As in modern poetry, each succeeding line begins anew at the left of the page. Where longer metres are employed, the pause in the middle of each line is also marked.

The old
Sumerian
hymnology

A few of the older Sumerian hymns strike noble chords. The most significant are the hymns and prayers addressed to Enlil, the old god of Nipur. One opens with the significant words:

Hymns
to Enlil

O Enlil, counsellor, doth any one comprehend thy form?
The strength-begifted lord of the harvest lands,
Created in the mountains, lord of the grain-fields,
Warrior who possesseth great strength, father Enlil,
Thou art the powerful prince of the gods,
For creating posterity thou sustainest life,
As the air, thou art all-pervading.

Another psalm which is really a lament addressed to Enlil begins:

O honored one, relent, behold thy city!
O exalted and honored one, relent, behold thy city!
O lord of the lands, relent, behold thy city!
O lord of unerring word, relent, behold thy city.
Enlil, father of Sumer, relent, behold thy city!

Amen-
hotep
IV's hymn to Aton

A large number of hymns sung to the gods have come down from the beginnings of Egyptian history. The crowning product of this wide-spread tendency to worship the gods with song and musical accompaniment is the famous hymn in praise of Aton by the great reforming king Amenhotep IV. It opens with the majestic passage:

Thy dawning is beautiful in the horizon of heaven,
O living Aton, beginning of life!
When thou risest in the eastern horizon of heaven,
Thou fillest every land with thy beauty;
For thou art beautiful, great, glittering, high over the earth;
Thy rays, they encompass the lands, even all thou hast made.
Thou art Re, and thou hast carried them all away captive,
Thou bindest them by thy love.
Though thou art afar, thy rays are on earth,
Though thou art on high, thy footprints are the day.

The hymn then goes on to describe night and darkness and the god's care for men and animals in language strikingly parallel to that of Psalm 104. (Cf. § 95.) After picturing the creation of man and the animals the poem continues:

How manifold are thy works!
They are hidden from before us,
O thou sole god, whose powers no other possesseth,
Thou didst create the earth according to thy desire,
While thou wast alone:
Men, all cattle large and small,
All that are upon the earth,
That go about upon their feet;
All that are on high,
That fly with their wings.

The poem concludes with an ardent prayer by the king in his own behalf:

Thou art in my heart,
There is no other that knoweth thee,
Save thy son Ikhnaton;
Thou hast made him wise in thy designs,
And in thy might.*

Most of the Egyptian hymns are trivial and repetitious. After the remarkable burst of reforming activity under Amenhotep IV, little religious progress is discernible. The later poems become mere repetitions of the ancient hymns or else tiresome liturgies. As in art and literature, so in the praise of the gods, the Egyptians reached their zenith long before the beginnings of Israel's history. It is not improbable that the prominence given to the song service of the Egyptians exerted a certain influence on the Jewish worshippers at the Yahu temple, which stood for generations in the city of Elephantine, only a few yards away from a famous Egyptian shrine. In the sacred city of Memphis and in other great cities of Egypt there were ample opportunities for the Egyptians to exert at least an indirect influence upon the imitative Jews of the dispersion. With the possible exception, however, of the one hundred and fourth Psalm, it is impossible to trace a direct transference of Egyptian thought to the Jewish Psalter. The incontestable superiority of the Hebrew psalms to those which come from the land of the Nile speak conclusively against such a transfer.

Influence of the Egyptian hymns upon the Psalter

The history of the development of Babylonian and Assyrian hymnology is in many ways closely parallel to that among the Egyptians: the older hymns are the nobler; the later are little more than repetitions or slavish imitations of the older models. The same hymns were sung as late as 200 B.C. in practically the same form as in the days of Hammurabi, who lived nearly two thousand years earlier. Of these ancient psalms the hymns to Shamash, the sun-god, are the noblest. In one he is addressed as follows:

Babylonian and Assyrian hymns

The law of mankind dost thou direct,
Eternally just in the heavens art thou,
Of faithful judgment towards all the world art thou;
Thou knowest what is right, thou knowest what is wrong.

O Shamash! Supreme judge, great lord of all the world art thou!
Lord of creation, merciful one of the world art thou!
O Shamash! on this day purify and cleanse the king, the son of his god;
Whatever is evil within him, let it be taken out.

Elsewhere the chief god of Babylon is thus addressed:

Powerful Marduk, whose anger is a destroying flood.
Who reconciled is like a merciful father,
I am oppressed by prayers without reply;
Wails unheard depress me.

Sometimes these psalms or petitions are in dialogue form: first the priest presents the cause of the petitioner and then the petitioner himself speaks. In all of them there is much repetition, which reveals their liturgical purpose. They also contain references to their use in connection with the great feasts, as, for example, that of the New Year. Upon the Jewish exiles living in Babylon these elaborate services must have made a profound impression and must have emphasized the tendency, already strong, to develop this form of the ritual in connection with the second temple. Occasional echoes of the ancient Sumerian and Babylonian hymns may be traced in the Hebrew Psalter, but for the most part the older hymnology is cold and barren compared with the fervent songs later sung by the worshippers of Jehovah.

INTRODUCTION

Distinct references, like that in Amos 5²³, to the songs sung in the temple at Bethel, and, in Lamentations 2⁷, to the din on the day of solemn assembly, leave little doubt that the Hebrews, even before the exile, chanted songs at their sanctuaries on the great feast-days. In certain of the pre-exilic prophetic books, as, for example, Jeremiah 9¹⁷⁻²² and 12⁷⁻¹², are found lyrical poems which in form and content closely resemble many of the individual psalms found in the first part of the Psalter. Concerning the nature of the psalms sung in connection with pre-exilic temples there is no clear evidence. Amos appears to have regarded them with disfavor. Whether or not any of them are still preserved in the Psalter must be determined from a detailed study of the individual psalms.

The superscriptions of the individual psalms contain certain suggestions regarding the history of Old Testament hymnology. The oldest Hebrew designation of a lyric poem (shîr) is usually translated song. It is used to describe the joyous songs in Genesis 31²⁷, Isaiah 5¹, 30²⁹, the triumphal ode chanted by the Hebrew women after the great victory under the leadership of Deborah and Barak (Judg. 5¹²), and the love-songs in the Song of Songs. It also describes the songs sung at drunken revels (Is. 24⁹). In every case it is the designation of joyous songs sung probably with musical accompaniments. This meaning is also implied by the Greek equivalent psalmos (from which comes the English word psalm), which means a song sung to the accompaniment of a harp or some stringed instrument. This title is borne by a group of psalms which appear to be among the oldest in the Psalter. As the title implies, they are especially adapted to liturgical use. Seven psalms bear the title Miktam, which probably means chosen. All of them are ascribed to David and most of them are relatively early. Their noble style and strong emotion confirm the popular interpretation of this term. Fifty-seven psalms bear the title Mizmor. The derivation of this term is not certain, but it probably means prime, that is, psalms selected for use, possibly, in the synagogue. Thirteen psalms bear the title Maskil, which comes from the common Hebrew verb meaning to ponder, to meditate. The contents of these meditations indicate that most of them come from the circle of the wise. Their contents also suggest that they are comparatively late. These different titles clearly indicate that the Psalter consists of collections of psalms which come from different periods and from different groups of writers.

A second group of superscriptions represents the later traditions regarding the authorship of individual psalms or gives the names of famous characters in Israel's history to which they were ascribed. Seventy-four psalms in the Hebrew Bible bear the title To David. In the Greek version many other psalms are ascribed to Israel's early poet king. The meaning of this title has been differently interpreted. It is exceedingly doubtful if the Hebrew preposition to was ever used before the exile to designate authorship. In

Isaiah 38⁹, which is probably post-exilic, it is used to describe a poem attributed to Hezekiah. From the beginning of the exile the use of this term to indicate possession became increasingly prominent. The Sidonian coins bear a similar inscription: To the Sidonians. The closest analogy to the title To David is the inscription, To the Sons of Korah, borne by Psalms 42-49, or the title To Asaph (e. g., Ps. 50). Clearly this title does not mean that these psalms were written by members of these guilds of singers but rather that they were either dedicated to them or written for their use. Hence the title To David must mean either a psalm dedicated to David or else one of a collection of songs made by a guild of singers who bore the historic designation David. The contents of these seventy-four so-called Davidic psalms leaves no doubt that the majority, if not all of them, were written long after the days of David. This fact lends probability to the conclusion that the title Psalm to David, like the corresponding terms Proverbs of Solomon and Law of Moses, was used to designate an early literary production the exact authorship of which was unknown, but which was by current tradition attributed to the traditional patron of this type of literature.

That the tendency in time became strong to attribute all lyric poetry to David is confirmed not only by the title but also by the epilogue to Psalm 72: The Prayers of Jesse the Son of David are ended. The same tendency gave rise to the third type of superscription which connects individual psalms with incidents in the life of the great king. Thirteen such superscriptions are found. These historical notes are based on the narratives in I and II Samuel after these books had received their final Deuteronomic redaction. They cannot, therefore, be earlier than the exile. It is possible that they were added by the editor who collected the so-called Davidic collection of psalms. They are scattered throughout the Psalter, beginning with the third psalm and concluding with Psalm 142.

The tendency to attribute all psalms to David

A third type of superscription consists of the musical directions attached to certain psalms. Most of them are found in connection with the psalms inscribed to the musical director, and they were clearly intended to facilitate the use of the psalms in the synagogue or temple service. Of these musical directions there are two types: (1) those designating the voice and (2) those indicating the tone or melody. Under the first class several, as in I Chronicles 15²⁰, bear the title For maidens, that is, for soprano or falsetto voices. Two others (6, 12) have a musical direction that recurs in I Chronicles 15²¹. It probably means on the octave, or the lower octave. The designations of tone or melody apparently consist of the opening word or words of a popular song introduced by the phrase in accordance with. Thus, Psalm 56 was to be sung to the same tune as the popular song, The Silent Dove of Them Who Are Afar Off. The superscription to Psalms 45, 69, and 80 is probably to be translated, My Testimony is a Beautiful Anemone. The melody of Psalm 22 bears the picturesque title Hind of the Dawn. The difficulties which later translators found in interpreting these superscriptions is shown by the wide variations in the renderings. In the light of the Greek and Syriac, the superscriptions of Psalms 8, 81, and 84 should probably be rendered, For the Wind Presses, but this is rendered by the Targum, The Harp which David Brought to Gath.

The immediate historical background of the Psalter

The final proofs regarding the date of individual psalms and, therefore, of the growth of the Psalter are the literary characteristics, the historical allusions, and the spirit and thought of each psalm; but the analogies in the development of hymnology in other religions, the occasional references in the Hebrew writings outside the Psalter, and the testimony of the superscriptions indicate beyond doubt that the growth of Israel's lyric literature was gradual and culminated in the four centuries following the destruction of Jerusalem. The immediate historical background of the majority of the psalms was clearly a period of crisis and persecution. Like the earliest Christian hymns, they were cast in the furnace of affliction. Recent discovery and biblical research have given us a new and increasingly definite knowledge of the four centuries and a half that followed the destruction of Jerusalem in 586 B.C. For the faithful Jew it was a period of intense and protracted agony relieved only by a few brief intervals of peace and prosperity. The sack of their temple and capital city, the flight of many refugees to Egypt, and the deportation of their political and spiritual leaders to Babylonia left the Jewish people dismembered and crushed. In the words of the author of Lamentations 4¹⁴, 15:

They wandered as blind men through the streets, polluted with blood;
That men might not touch them they drew aside their garments:
'Unclean!' they cried to them, 'Depart, do not touch.'

Sadly he wails:

Our eyes still fail in looking, for help that is unavailing,
In our watching we have watched in vain for a nation that does not help.

Hopes that centred about the rebuilding of the temple

The Jews, however, through the ages have always proved a race of optimists. Even the disaster of 586 B.C. could not crush them. Gradually their hope kindled and centred in the survivors of the house of David. Refugees came back to build their hovels on the ruins of Jerusalem and a simple ritual was instituted on the desecrated temple site. The conquest of Babylon by Cyrus in 538 B.C. brought to the Jews of Palestine religious liberty and possibly inspired a handful of the exiles to come back from distant Babylonia. In 520 Haggai and Zechariah fired the zeal of the poverty-stricken remnant that remained in Palestine to rebuild the ruined walls of the ancient temple and to revive the sacrifices. The news of the mighty revolutions that shook the Persian Empire at the beginning of the reign of Darius led the temple builders to hope, though in vain, for the restoration of their former independence and glory under the rule of their governor, Zerubbabel, the surviving representative of the house of David. It was one of the rare moments in post-exilic history when Israel's earlier messianic hopes burst into a flame; but that flame was quickly extinguished when the rule of Darius was firmly established throughout the Persian Empire. Zerubbabel was probably banished or put to death. The high priest under a Persian governor became henceforth the civil as well as the religious head of the Jewish people.

The seventy years which followed were among the darkest and most discouraging in all of Israel's history. They are recorded not in the annals but in the lyrics of the Old Testament. When Nehemiah came to Palestine in 445 B.C. he found the Jewish community the helpless victim of the pitiless attacks of its heathen neighbors. Worse still, he found the mass of the people robbed of their hereditary estates and enslaved by their heartless rulers. It was a period when fidelity to Jehovah and to his demands was rewarded by poverty and persecution and the taunts of those who, like Job's friends, held to the old dogma that misfortune and suffering were the inevitable proofs of sin and divine displeasure. It is probable that out of this period of anguish come the two noblest products of Israel's immortal genius, the book of Job and the rhapsodies of Isaiah 40-55. Faith, which, though crushed to earth, rose to heaven, was invincible. Apparently, it was the II Isaiah's peerless ideal of the suffering servant of Jehovah that kindled the zeal of the youthful Nehemiah in distant Susa and thus set in motion forces which not only resulted in the rebuilding of the walls of Jerusalem but also in the transformation of the ideals and life of Judaism.

seventy
distress

The period which followed the work of Nehemiah was one of prosperity and confidence and exultation for the Jews of Palestine. It is clearly the background of many of the most beautiful psalms in the Psalter. Through the dark, gloomy valley Jehovah had led his people forth unharmed, and now as their divine host set before them a rich table in the presence of their enemies. During the closing years of the Persian period the avenging armies of the bloody Artaxerxes Ochus traversed Palestine. How far they afflicted the Jews and left their mark upon the Psalter is not entirely clear. At about the same time the feud between Jew and Samaritan began to distort and embitter the spirit of these two kindred yet alien peoples.

Closing
of the Persian
period

The conquest of Palestine by Alexander the Great, 332 B.C., did not materially affect the fortunes of the Judean community but it greatly broadened their intellectual horizon. Many Jews followed in the wake of Alexander's conquests or else were attracted to the great cities of the eastern Mediterranean, and especially to Egypt, by the unusual opportunities offered them for commerce and trade. Flourishing Greek colonies on the borders of Syria and in Palestine itself brought the Jews into close contact with the alluring life and culture of Greece. The psalms of the Greek period show the influence of this broader outlook which came through contact with Greek thought and civilization. Joel, who lived during the latter part of the Persian period, is the last Old Testament prophet whose name we know. Henceforth the wise men, or sages, filled the place formerly occupied by the prophets. Unlike the earlier prophets who spoke to the nation, they addressed their teachings to the individual. Recognizing the great value of the lyric as a form of teaching, they presented the results of their thought and experience not only in proverbs but in psalms. Like the prophets and priests, they made a profound impression upon the Psalter.

INTRODUCTION

The Maccabean struggle

During the century and a half following the death of Alexander the Jews of Palestine were in turn courted or conquered by the Ptolemies of Egypt or by the Seleucid rulers of Syria. Finally, about 200 B.C., they came under the permanent control of Syria. During the next half century Greek ideas and culture made alarming inroads upon Judaism. At last the reigning high priests themselves became ardent Hellenists. Finally, however, the bitter persecutions of Antiochus Epiphanes aroused the slumbering loyalty of the Jewish race. The blood of its martyrs fired the zeal of the aged priest Mattathias and his brave sons, and Israel entered upon its second great, heroic age. The valiant deeds of Saul and David were repeatedly eclipsed on hard-fought battle-fields. The faith and swords of Judas and his followers ultimately won not only religious freedom but also political independence.

Conclusions

The three great crises that have left their indelible stamp upon the Psalter are (1) the destruction of Jerusalem in 586, (2) the seventy years of discouragement and petty persecution which followed the disillusionment of those who rebuilt the second temple, and (3) the bitter Maccabean struggle. The brighter, more joyous periods were (1) the few short years between 520 and 516 B.C. when the temple was being rebuilt, (2) the period of hopefulness and rejoicing following the work of Nehemiah in 445, (3) the comparatively calm though less joyous Greek period, and (4) the confident, exultant, warlike age inaugurated by the brilliant victories of Judas Maccabeus.

THE STRUCTURE AND HISTORY OF THE PSALTER

THE Psalter in its present form is divided into five divisions or books. These are 1-41, 42-72, 73-89, 90-106, and 107-150. Each of these divisions is marked by a concluding doxology. Psalm 150 in itself constitutes the closing doxology. The first three divisions are natural and apparently mark successive stages in the early growth of the Psalter. The division between 106 and 107 is arbitrary, for Psalms 104-107 are in theme a literary unit. This fivefold division is the work either of the final editor of the Psalter or else of some later reviser. Its aim was probably to divide the Psalter into five divisions corresponding to the five books of the law. It emphasizes, however, the fact that the Psalter is made up of smaller collections and that, like the book of Proverbs, it grew gradually as the result of bringing different collections together. Chapter 1, which constitutes a general introduction, like the introduction to the book of Proverbs (1-9), is probably one of the latest additions to the book. Its didactic character reflects the thought of the later wise and of their successors the scribes.

The five great divisions
of the Psalter

The oldest collection of psalms in the Psalter is clearly the so-called first Davidic collection found in 2-41. Psalm 10, which lacks the title To David, was once the second half of an acrostic of which the first is found in 9. The title of Psalm 38 is also lacking except in the Greek version. Its contents indicate that it was later inserted in this earlier collection. Another Davidic collection is found in 51-72. At the close of this collection is found the significant note, following an elaborate doxology: The prayers of David, the son of Jesse, are ended. This postscript lends force to the suggestion, made long ago by Ewald, that the first Davidic collection was once followed immediately by the second contained in 51-72. If this reconstruction be adopted it also solves another problem, for at present Psalm 50, which is dedicated to Asaph, is separated from the other Asaph psalms in 73-83 by the second Davidic collection (51-72). This restoration brings together the two great collections of psalms attributed to the temple singers, the sons of Korah and the sons of Asaph. The general character and contents of the second Davidic collection confirms the conclusion that they come from the same general point of view and from a little later period than those in the first collection.

The two
Davidic collections

The evidence is reasonably convincing that the majority of the sixty-two psalms in these Davidic collections (2-41, 51-72) were written during the first half of the Persian period or earlier and that the first collection was made soon after the work of Nehemiah and the priestly reforms associated with Ezra. The literary style of these psalms is vigorous and free from the Aramaisms and artificialities which characterize many of the psalms in the latter part of the Psalter. They contain few liturgical formulas and most of them are written from the individual or class point of view. In general they reflect the events following the Babylonian exile and the life of a poor, struggling community surrounded by merciless oppressors. The teachings of the pre-exilic prophets, and especially Jeremiah (e. g., Ps. 16 and 39), have made a profound impression upon the minds of the psalmists. The chief problems are those of Lamentations and of Isaiah 40–66, with which writings these psalms have many points of contact. They reveal the sufferings and the hopes of the afflicted during the days preceding the appearance of Nehemiah as well as the confidence and optimism that burst out after his advent. The editor or editors who collected them were probably inspired to do so by the rebuilding of the walls of Jerusalem, the revival of the Judean community, and the extension of the temple service which resulted from the work of that great Jewish layman. The fact that Psalm 14 is reproduced in 53 and 31¹⁻³ in 71¹⁻³ suggests that the second collection, 51–72, was made independently and a little later, possibly near the close of the Persian or early in the Greek period.

The Korahite
psalms

Psalms 42–49 bear the superscription, To the Sons of Korah. Inasmuch as these were the chief guild of singers at the Jerusalem temple during the middle and latter part of the Persian period, and were later supplanted by the guilds of Asaph, Heman, and Jeduthun, it is probable that the collection of Korahite psalms comes from the same period. This dating is confirmed by their contents. The problem of innocent suffering still rests heavily upon the psalmists, but the earlier sense of guilt is lacking, even as in the contemporary prophecy of Joel. The literary style is vigorous and highly poetic. The liturgical form as well as the title of these psalms indicates that most of them were written for use in the temple service. The eight Korahite psalms (42–49) were probably added to the earlier Davidic collections about the beginning of the Greek period.

psalms
of the sons of Korah

In the second half of the Psalter the indications of historical growth are indistinct. The titles point to the work of a final editor who combined many smaller collections. The third general division opens with a collection of eleven psalms, 73–83, to which should be added Psalm 50, which in the process of editorial revision had been separated from them. These are all dedicated to the sons of Asaph, who, we may infer from the references in Chronicles, came into prominence about 250 B.C. In this collection are found certain psalms, as, for example, 74, 79, and 83, which clearly voice the feelings of the Jews while they were being ground down under the cruel heel of Antiochus Epiphanes (167–164 B.C.).

The Hallel
psalms

Scattered through the latter part of the Psalter are two groups of so-called Hallel psalms (104–118 and 136–150), each of which is introduced by the superscription Hallelujah, which may be interpreted: Give praise to Yah. Their contents as well as their title indicate that they were written for liturgical use. Psalms 104–107 are in reality one psalm describing Jehovah's rulership of the world and leadership of his people. Psalm 104 describes the creation, 105 the exodus, 106 Israel's early history, and 107 the later restoration. Psalms 111 and 112 constitute an acrostic. In the later Jewish ritual Psalms 113 and 114 were chanted before the Passover meal and 115-118 at its close. In the great Hallel psalm, 136, the same refrain is repeated twenty-six times. Psalms 146-149, like 150, are in reality long doxologies adapted to use in the synagogue and temple service. These Hallel psalms probably come from the latter part of the Greek and the first part of the Maccabean periods. Several of them are quoted by the Chronicler, indicating that they were probably in existence as early as 250 B.C. although they may not then have been incorporated in the Psalter.

Psalms 120-134 are a group of songs of ascent or pilgrim psalms. With the exception of Psalm 126, they are all written in the same five-beat measure. They are characterized by original and bold figures of speech and by an intense love for Jerusalem and the temple. As a rule, their spirit is joyous and hopeful. The didactic note is strong and their point of view is in general that of the Pharisees. They probably antedate the fierce Maccabean struggle and come from the latter part of the Greek period. As their title implies, they voice the feelings of the pilgrims as they resorted to the temple at their annual feasts.

The
psalms
of ascent

Even as the revival of the Palestinian community, following the work of Nehemiah, inspired the first collection of psalms (2-41), so the Maccabean victories and the restoration of the temple service appear to have furnished the incentive to make new collections of psalms and to complete the canon of the Psalter. This concluding work was in all probability done during the peaceful, prosperous reign of Simon (143-135 B.C.). Contemporary records indicate that it was an age in which many new psalms were written and when great attention was given to the development of the temple ritual. This tendency was encouraged by the aged Simon, as is stated in I Maccabees 14^{12, 14, 15}:

The completion
of the Psalter

He made peace in the land,
And Israel rejoiced with great joy.
Everyone sat under his own vine and fig tree,
And there was no one to make them afraid.
He was full of zeal for the law,
And every lawless and wicked person he banished.
He made the sanctuary glorious,
And multiplied the vessels of the temple.

He probably also multiplied the temple singers and elaborated the song service. Israel had good cause to sing to Jehovah a new song, for he had crowned the afflicted with victory. The Psalter closes with their song of thanksgiving:

Let the faithful exult in glory,
Let them sing for joy on their beds.
Let the high praises of God be in their mouth,

INTRODUCTION

And a two-edged sword in their hand,
To execute vengeance upon the heathen,
And punishment on the peoples,
To bind their kings with chains,
Their nobles with fetters of iron,
To execute on them the judgment written;
It is an honor for all his faithful ones. (Ps. 149⁵⁻⁹.)

Thus the evidence is conclusive that the Psalter has a history as long and complex as the Old Testament itself. Certain of its older poems may come from the days of David, about 1000 B.C. Its later psalms breathe the warlike spirit of the Maccabean age. It represents the growth of at least eight centuries and the work of fully one hundred poets. Back of it lie two millenniums of Semitic religious history; but the psalms themselves, with few exceptions, come from the four centuries and a half that began with the destruction of Jerusalem in 586 B.C. They record the inspired insight, the dauntless courage, and the profound spiritual experiences of the noble souls who faced the cruel persecutions and the great crises of the Persian, Greek, and Maccabean periods. Born in stress and struggle, they have a unique message and meaning for all who are in the stream of life.

Triumphal Odes.—Of all the varied sentiments which gave rise to lyric poetry among the ancient Hebrews, that of exultation over some warlike achievement was probably the first to find expression in song. Each important victory was apparently commemorated by a triumphal ode. Most of these ancient songs appear to have been composed at the time when the events which they record transpired, and to have been first sung by the women, as the Hebrew warriors came back laden with the spoils of victory. Cf. Ex. 15^{1a} and §§ 3 and 4. From Ex. 15^{1a} and I Sam. 18⁷ it is evident that they were accompanied with joyful music and dance. Many of them, like the majestic triumphal ode in Judg. 5, were probably preserved on the lips of the people and possibly sung by the warriors as they later went out to battle. Some, as, for example, the ode commemorating the victory over the Moabites, Nu. 21²⁷, were treasured and recited on festal occasions by the bards or professional singers. In later times some, and possibly all, of them were collected and embodied in one of Israel's great song-books, the Book of the Wars of Jehovah or the Book of the Righteous One. Cf. Introd., p. 12.

Undoubtedly, the early Israelites possessed many more of these triumphal songs than have been preserved in the O.T. Those which we now have were quoted incidentally by the early prophetic historians, who evidently depended largely upon these and similar songs for the data which they have incorporated in their prose histories. The quotations suffice, however, to give an idea of the simplicity, freshness, variety, and rare dramatic power of these ancient songs. They also reveal clearly the aspirations and spirit and faith of the early Hebrews. No later historian acts as interpreter; but instead the primitive Israelite through them sets forth his innermost feelings and motives.

§ 1 In this very ancient fragment, perhaps the oldest in the O.T., the spirit of revenge, which the early man shares with the child, is forcibly expressed. It likewise voices the principle of blood vengeance underlying the ancient law of an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth, which is the basis of many regulations in the Code of Hammurabi as well as in the O.T. codes. Cf. Vol. IV, p. 117. It is also the dominant law of the Arab to-day.

The original occasion of this so-called Song of Lamech was probably a successful act of retaliation against an offending clan or tribe. The Cain alluded to in the song is evidently not the one mentioned in the much later and more familiar story of Cain and Abel in the same chapter, cf. Vol. I, § 6, but possibly the ancient hero of the genealogical list, 4¹⁷, who built the city of Enoch (Uruk) and who performed an act recorded in a tradition which has been lost. The first two lines are in the four-beat and the last four in the characteristic three-beat measure. For the setting of the poem, cf. Vol. I, § 4.

§ 2 In beauty of diction, vigor of movement, and variety of figure this poem ranks as one of the noblest in the O.T. Its spirit of praise and adoration connects it closely with the oldest psalms.

I will divide spoil, on them shall my desire be satisfied, in the Psalter, and yet the note of triumph and exultation that runs through it justifies its classification with the still older triumphal odes. Its main theme is the deliverance from the Egyptians at the Red Sea. To this event the first half of the poem is devoted, but the remainder, ¹¹⁻¹⁷, traces rapidly the experiences of the Hebrews in the wilderness, east of the Jordan, in the conquest of Canaan to the building of Solomon's temple and even to the days of Josiah and the rule of the Deuteronomic law, when Jerusalem came to be regarded as the place which Jehovah alone had chosen as his abode, ¹⁷. The point of view of at least the latter part of the song is the period after the Babylonian exile had cast its deep pall upon the Israelitish race, for in ¹⁷ there is an implied hope that Jehovah will again restore his people to Jerusalem.

The two opening lines appear to have come down from the days of the exodus itself, for both the early Judean and Ephraimite narratives have retained them, although the one puts it in the mouth of Moses and the other of Miriam. Cf. Vol. I, p. 176. The older version is probably that of ², Sing ye to Jehovah, the first person in ¹ being due to attraction. Some scholars have also been inclined to see in ², ³ and others in ¹⁻¹¹, ¹⁸ a Mosaic kernel. While this is not impossible, the evidence that ²⁻¹⁸ constitute a literary unit is strong. The parallelism of the succeeding stanzas is very marked, and this corresponds to the changes in metre: the first, a stanza of four lines of three beats each, contains an ascription of praise to Jehovah. This is followed by a stanza of four lines of five beats each, describing vividly the deliverance at the exodus. Vss. ⁶, ⁷, with lines of four beats, repeat in different language the ascription of praise to Jehovah, and then ⁸⁻¹⁰ give another picture of the exodus. Then ¹¹⁻¹² repeat the ascription and the rest of the poem cites other illustrations of Jehovah's power to deliver his people. The idea of Jehovah as a warrior, ³, is a characteristic Deuteronomic figure. Cf. Dt. ¹³⁰, ³². Also there are several peculiar words and grammatical forms running through the entire poem which are found elsewhere only in exilic or post-exilic writings. Both the early Judean prophetic, ¹⁰, and the late priestly versions, ⁸, of the exodus are in the mind of the poet, indicating that he was familiar with them in their popular, if not in their later written composite form. Cf. Vol. I, § 74. Hence the poem in its final form probably comes from the earlier part or middle of the Persian period.

While the original couplet, ¹⁵, ²¹, probably began, Sing ye to Jehovah, vs. ² is, like many of the national ps., in the first person. This opening couplet is quoted in Is. ¹²² and Ps. ¹¹⁸¹⁴ (with the same peculiar designation, Jah, for Jehovah), as if it were the opening words of an earlier song. Vss. ⁸, ¹⁷ are also quoted in Ps. ⁷⁸¹², ⁶⁴; vs. ⁸ in Neh. ⁹¹¹. All these quotations are in passages later than 400 B.C., suggesting strongly that ²⁻¹⁸ was once an independent and yet well-known song, possibly sung, as it is by the Jews to-day, in connection with the Passover feast. A later editor very naturally and appropriately assigned it to its present place, giving it the prominent position that it really deserves.

^b ¹⁵ So three codices. Through a common error the Heb. has lost the sign of the pronominal suffix.

^c ¹⁵ Lit., has become my deliverance.

^d ¹⁵ This vs. may be joined to the preceding, but it seems more naturally to introduce Jehovah's deeds as a warrior fighting in behalf of his people.

^e ¹⁵ This follows the late priestly version of the deliverance at the exodus. An attempt has been made to reproduce the alliteration of the Heb.

§ 3 The authorship, date, literary characteristics, and translation of this ancient song have already been discussed in Vol. I, § 139. It is the longest and noblest example of the triumphal ode in the O.T. In a series of dramatic scenes it presents the feelings of the actors and the important stages in the decisive battle which determined the mastery of Canaan and the fate of Jehovah's people. The prominence of Deborah and Jael and the tragic interest in the mother of Sisera, as she sits anxiously awaiting the arrival of her son, strongly suggest the feminine point of view and favor the conclusion that the author was a woman who voiced the impassioned feelings of the women as they witnessed the battle, and then, like Miriam and the women of Israel at an earlier time, or the daughters of Israel in the days of David, celebrated the victory as the conquering warriors returned.

The poem is so old and has suffered so much in transmission that it is impossible to determine the exact metre. Apparently the two and three beat measures were both used. As in David's lament over Saul and Jonathan, the variations are frequent and the metrical structure untrammelled. For fragments of still older triumphant odes, cf. the song sung to commemorate the victory over the Moabites in Nu. 21^{27b-30}, Vol. I, § 66, and over the Amorites, Josh. 10¹². 13, Vol. I, § 114.

§ 4 The occasion was the great victory of the Hebrews over the Philistines, which, according to I Sam. 17, was inaugurated by the slaying of Goliath by David. This particular fragment of the triumphal song was remembered because it marked the passing of popular favor from Saul to the youthful David, which aroused the bitter jealousy of Israel's first king.

Traditional Oracles.—Among the Babylonians, the Assyrians, the Greeks, the Romans (especially during the imperial period), and among most peoples of antiquity, oracles were very common and highly appreciated. The primitive ancestors of the Hebrews, like the early Arabs, undoubtedly often resorted to the priest or prophet in order to determine what was the divine will before undertaking an important enterprise. For an interesting example of the Heb. oracle, cf. I Sam. 30⁶. The answer was probably from earliest times cast in poetic form, as it was by Delphic priestess or Arabian kāhin. The common basis of all these oracles was the universal psychological motive which impels men to seek to ascertain from the god or gods what the future is destined to bring forth. The poetic form was employed because it was deemed the more impressive and appropriate way of expressing the divine will.

Early in Israel's history the oracle became the model of a peculiar type of literature. Starting with some striking fact in nature, as the peculiar habits of serpents, or in history, as the Heb. conquest of the early Canaanites, the poet-prophet presented the popular or prophetic explanation of these facts in the form of an oracular curse or blessing put in the mouth of Jehovah or some early ancestor like Noah or Jacob. As in Cranmer's prediction of the reign of Queen Elizabeth, in Shakespeare's Henry VIII, act V, scene 5, the poet writes with a detailed knowledge of the event but assumes a point of view antedating it. Sometimes he incorporated ancient proverbs or tribal songs, perhaps already attributed by tradition to some early saint. It is often difficult to determine whether the oracles originated with the prophet, who has given them their present setting, or were derived by him from some earlier source. Usually they are earlier poems, as, for example, the description of the different tribes in Gen. 49.

These ancient traditional oracles are the literary prototypes of the later Jewish apocalypses such as are found in the books of Enoch, Daniel, and Revelation. Some of them also employ obscure language and the symbolism of animals, as do the later forms of this same peculiar literature. Some of them, like those in Gen. 49, throw light upon recondite events in the early history of the tribes. Others reflect the primitive faith of the early Hebrews; but their chief value lies in the light which they throw upon the motives and aspirations of the Israelites and the philosophy of life which guided them in the earliest stages of their national and religious development.

§ 5 For the setting of this oracle, cf. Vol. I, § 2. This ancient curse represents the prophetic explanation of why serpents, unlike ordinary animals, were compelled to go wriggling through the dust, the mortal enemies of men and the object of their constant attack.

§ 6 The natural basis of this oracle is the pain which woman had to bear as mother and Oriental wife. As in the immediately preceding and following oracles, all pain and misfortune and discomfort are traced back to sin as the cause.

§ 8 Canaan in this ancient oracle represents the Canaanites, whom the Hebrews, the descendants of Shem, conquered and enslaved. Japheth is probably here to be identified with the Phœnicians. It possibly also included their colonies along the shores of the Mediterranean. The underlying historical fact, which this oracle formulates, is that the rich, opulent, highly civilized Canaanites were subjugated and completely absorbed by the semi-barbarous nomadic Israelites, who, in turn, as in the days of David and Solomon, made close commercial alliances with the Phœnicians. Primitive thought apparently explained this strange event in the terms of this oracle, which is equivalent to saying that it was thus divinely decreed. The prophet, however, who has incorporated the oracle in its present setting, goes deeper and presents the true explanation: it was because of the moral depravity of the Canaanites and the superior moral and religious sense of the Hebrews that the latter attained the ascendancy over the decadent and immoral Canaanites. Cf. Vol. I, § 5.

§ 9 This is the oldest early Judean version of that divine promise to the Israelitish race through Abraham which is repeated in fourfold form in Gen. 15 and 17. Cf. Vol. I, § 16. It embodies those early hopes and aspirations of which the days of David and Solomon were the historical basis. Vs. ¹ voices the attitude toward the outside world that was dominant until the experiences of the exile opened the eyes of certain prophets to the idea of unselfish service. Cf. Gen. 25²³, Vol. I, § 28, for the brief Jacob-Esau birth oracle; Gen. 27^{27b-29}, Vol. I, § 30, for Isaac's blessing upon Jacob; Gen. 27^{39b}, Vol. I, § 30, for Isaac's blessing on Esau; and Gen. 48¹⁵⁻¹⁶, Vol. I, § 55, for Jacob's blessing upon Ephraim and Manasseh.

^a12² The current translation, shall be blessed, is not supported by the Heb. nor the parallel passages. Cf. Vol. I, § 12, note ¹.

§ 10 To Jacob, the traditional father of the twelve tribes of Israel, the different oracles relating to them were appropriately attributed, just as to Isaac were assigned the Jacob-Esau oracles. This traditional ascription is embodied not only in the present early Judean prophetic setting, vs. ¹, but also in the introduction to the oracle itself, ². Thus the evidence is strong that the tendency to attribute anonymous writings to certain prominent characters of a preceding age was very early, for the present poem in its completeness apparently antedates the division of the Hebrew Empire. It is, indeed, the national song of united Israel and may well come from a court poet in the days of David, who collected the earlier tribal songs and added the exordium and the exuberant description of the conquest and rule of Judah under the leadership of the great king from Bethlehem, ³⁻¹². After the division and the events which followed he would not, in all probability, have sung:

*The scepter shall not pass from Judah,
Nor the royal staff from between his feet.*

Nowhere are these later calamities reflected. The tone of the poem is critical and the guilty tribes are condemned; but the spirit in general is jubilant, and there is no evidence that the poet wrote later than the middle of the reign of David or that of Solomon. This conclusion is also confirmed by the vocabulary and literary style which are primitive. The same is true of the institutions and religious ideas.

It is evident that many popular songs, some describing the situation, some the characteristics, and some the striking experiences of the different tribes have here been woven together. Several of them evidently, e. g., those regarding Zebulun and Issachar, anticipate conditions antedating the union of the tribes or even the situation reflected in Judg. 5. Some contain allusions to incidents recorded in the traditions of Gen., e. g., 34, and others to prehistoric events. In the suggestions which it furnishes regarding the earliest beginnings of Israel's life, the ancient poem is of great historical value.

With only a very few doubtful exceptions, the three-beat measure prevails throughout these poems. The ideas are simple and the literary style is crude but vigorous. They record the first beginnings of philosophical thinking. There are traces also of a didactic purpose: in the opening stanzas, for example, the poet is seeking to formulate the principles illustrated by the bitter experience of the tribes.

^b49² And hear has apparently been added by mistake, for the same verbal idea is found in the next line.

^c49² Cf. the introductions to the later prophetic messages, Is. 1¹⁰, 28¹⁴, 32⁹, Mic. 1¹.

^d49³ Lit., first of my strength; Gk., the first of my children. Cf. Dt. 21¹⁷, Ps. 105²³, Hos. 12^{1b}. Reuben was probably regarded as the first-born because this tribe was the first to settle in its east-Jordan home.

^h49^d Lit., brothers, they are of the same type as well as blood kin.

ⁱ49^e Lit., liver, according to ancient Semites a seat of the feelings. So Gk. and the original Heb., supported by the context.

^j49^f Or unite, i. e., do not join.

^k49^g So Gk., which correctly interprets the Heb., man, as generic, equal to mankind.

^l49^h The most heinous of crimes in the ancient nomadic life, that of hocking an ox. It recalls the summary punishment meted out in the pioneer periods to horse thieves. The historical reference probably is to the treachery of the Reubenites and Levites in breaking their covenant and slaying the Shechemites as recorded in Gen. 34.

^m49ⁱ The Heb., as frequently in this ancient poem, has a play on the proper name Jehudah—jôdûkā.

^q49^m If the line, which follows in the Heb., is original, it probably is to be interpreted As long as one goes to Shiloh. Cf. the corresponding expression in the early Judean prophetic narrative of Judg. 18²¹, So they set up Micah's graven image . . . as long as the hand of God was in Shiloh, Sam., Gk., Sym., Theod., and Targ. Onkelos, however, give the messianic rendering, Until that one comes to whom it belongs, but it can hardly be original, for this interpretation assumes a Heb. word found only in the latest O.T. writings. Furthermore, the line interrupts the context. It was apparently suggested to a late scribe who lived after the fall of the Judean house and who looked, in common with the men of his day, for the re-establishment of the Davidic messianic rule.

^x49¹⁵ Lit., a slave to task-work.

^y49¹⁶ Another play on the proper name Dan—yādān. The reference is probably to the historic fact that the little tribe of Dan, in its remote home at the foot of Mount Hermon, ruled itself bravely and effectively, waging its battles with the larger foes about. Cf. Dt. 33²².

^z49¹⁸ Possibly a later addition, yet not inappropriate in the present context, for only with the help of the divine deliverer could the little tribe hope to emerge triumphantly from the unequal conflict.

^a49¹⁹ Another play on the proper name, Gad gēdūd yēgūdēnnū. An allusion to the constant attacks of the Ammonites and Arabians to which the Gadites, because of their exposed situation, were subject. Cf. Dt. 33²⁰. ²¹.

^b49¹⁹ The final letter of this line has, through a copyist's error, been prefixed to the next line. The Gk. has preserved the original reading.

^c49²¹ The translation of this vs. is doubtful. The usual translation is:

*Naphtali is a hind set free,
 That gives forth pleasant words.*

The above reading, however, is based upon the Heb. consonantal text and on the whole gives a clearer and more intelligible picture.

^{h49} Following a slightly different vowel pointing, which is supported by the Syr. The current translations make little sense.

ⁱ⁴⁹ The Heb. adds stone, but this is not supported by the Gk. versions nor by the context. The reference is to the stone of Bethel. Cf. Is. 30²⁸.

^{j49} So Sam., Gk., and Syr. Cf. Gen. 17¹ and Vol. I, § 16, note 4.

^{k49} So Gk., supported by the context. The Heb. is evidently corrupt. Possibly it originally read with blessings on father and man and child.

^{m49} Lit., that which is desirable; Gk., blessings.

ⁿ⁴⁹ Lit., crown of the head.

^{o49} Lit., a Nazirite.

§ 11 This song is a later and widely variant version of the so-called blessing of Jacob in Gen. 49. Both refer to the geographical position, character, and experiences of the different tribes. The description of Joseph is in many lines verbally identical in both, showing that one poet was familiar with the work of the other. Dt. 33, however, is a more perfect unit, being provided with a noble and deeply religious prologue and epilogue. The style also is much more finished and the tone eulogistic. The conquest is only a distant memory of the past, ²⁷. ²⁸. The tribe of Simeon has disappeared entirely. Reuben is few in numbers and in danger of becoming extinct and the Levites have become an honored caste of priests. Judah, instead of ruling over all the tribes, as in Gen. 49⁸⁻¹⁰, is apart by itself and in danger of being overwhelmed by its adversaries. Joseph, represented by the powerful tribes of Ephraim and Manasseh, is the object of the poet's pride.

Clearly the poem was written after the division of David's empire in 937 and before the armies of Assyria, in 736 B.C., brought disaster to the northern tribes. The days of Jeroboam I have been suggested as the background, but they were overshadowed by the act of disruption and the invasion of Shishak. The only entirely satisfactory setting is the middle of the prosperous reign of Jeroboam II. Victories over the Arameans and a strongly centralized government gave northern Israel, about the middle of the eighth century, its brilliant but brief Indian summer. A poet in the court of Jeroboam II is probably the author of this majestic poem, which voices the popular hopes and national pride that are the background of Amos's stern prophecies. About 750 B.C. may with assurance be accepted as the date of the tribal oracles in 6-25; possibly the prologue, 1-5, with its late words, may be an exilic or post-exilic addition. This is certainly true of the superscription, which probably came from the editor who introduced it into the book of Dt. and attributed the whole to the traditional author of this late prophetic book.

Except that both begin with Reuben, the order of the tribes in the two poems is essentially different: in Gen. 49 it is Reuben, Simeon, Levi, Judah, Zebulun, Issachar, Dan, Gad, Asher, Naphtali, Joseph, and Benjamin; in Dt. 33, Reuben, Judah, Levi, Benjamin, Joseph, Zebulun, Issachar, Gad, Dan, Naphtali, and Asher.

The metre, as in Gen. 49, is the regular three-beat measure.

^a33^r The traditional punctuation of the Heb. gives the obscure reading from the ten thousands of my holy ones. But this makes no clear sense and is not supported by the context. The other reading of the Heb., which is followed above, gives a clear parallel to the preceding lines. Kadesh is mentioned in 1^a and 32^a and was apparently the centre of the religious life of the Israelites during their residence in the wilderness. The Sam., Syr., Lat., and Targ. connect the Heb. verb with another root and read and with him were holy myriads. Luc. and Gk., however, have, with myriads of Kadesh.

^r33^r The text is evidently corrupt. The Gk. and Luc. appear to have only guessed at the meaning and read from his right angels were with him. A slight correction of the Heb. gives the above reading, which is closely paralleled in the corresponding theophanies, Hab. 3^a, Ex. 20^{1a}, Ps. 50². Possibly the word sometimes translated law is a gloss. It is found only in Ezra, Esther, and Dan. and is of Persian origin.

^s33^r Following the superior reading of the Gk. and Luc. Heb., peoples, i. e., heathen nations, but this is out of harmony with the context, and especially the next line.

^t33^r I. e., Israel's. The references to Israel as a holy nation are many, e. g., 7^a, 14², 21, 26^{1a}.

^u33^r Luc. has in his lands; Lat., in his hand; Heb., in thy hand.

^v33^r The Heb. verb in this line is hopelessly corrupt. The above is based upon the plausible reading of the Syr.

^w33^r Following the Lam. and a large number of MSS. in translating feet instead of the Heb., foot. For the idiom, cf. Gen. 30^{2a}, 33^{1a}; the meaning is, closely attended.

^x33^r The antecedent must be found in the first line of the vs.

^y33^r Heb., Moses, but the context indicates that Jehorah is the one in the mind of the poet.

^z33^r Transferring Judah to the second line of the couplet, as the measure requires.

^a33^r Probably written from the point of view of a northern Israelite and after the division of the kingdom, following the death of Solomon.

^b37^r Possibly a reference to Shishak's invasion soon after the division or to later attacks upon Judah.

^e33⁹ The reference probably is to the seal of the Levites recorded in Ex. 32²⁷⁻²⁹, when they did not hesitate to slay even their apostate kinsmen. Cf. Jesus' words in Mt. 10³⁷, Lk. 14²⁶.

^f33¹¹ The Heb. word means possessions or else, as here, efficiency in the discharge of responsibility.

^h33¹² So Sam. and Gk. The Heb. has lost the and.

^k33¹² I. e., in his temple at Jerusalem, situated on the sloping hills which, according to Josh. 15⁸, 18²⁴, lay within the bounds of Benjamin.

^l33¹³ Heb., from the dew, but the parallelism supports and demands the slight emendation which gives the above reading. Cf. the same idiom, Gen. 27²⁹. In 49²⁵ this vs., in the same original form, is also found.

^m33¹⁶ Probably reference to Jehovah's revelation to Moses through the burning bush, recorded in Ex. 3¹⁻⁴. A slight change in the text gives the possible reading who dwell in Sinai.

oracle

§ 14 For detailed notes and setting, cf. Vol. II, § 29. This passage voices the popular hopes regarding the Judean royal house. Its language and that of its setting strongly suggest that it was not written until a short time before the exile; its hortatory note is that of the Deuteronomio school. Because of its setting and connection with David, the passage made a profound impression upon later psalm writers. Cf. especially Pss. 72, 89, 132.

§ 15 The elaborate prologue, the reference to David as the singer of the songs of Israel, ¹, and the fulsome praise of David and of his rule in ²⁻⁷ indicate that this traditional oracle is not from David but rather from a much later period when traditions were beginning to magnify the personality of Israel's early king. Vs. ⁶ contains a clear reference to the oracle in II Sam. 7¹⁰⁻¹⁵. These indications carry its date down close to the Babylonian exile, and the wisdom note in the closing vs., if these be original, points to an even later date.

^b II Sam. 23². Following the Old Lat. and Vulg. in substituting Jacob for the Heb., Israel, which is repeated in the next line.

• 23⁴ Slightly revising the text. The Heb. adds after the rain.

• 23⁵ So Luc. Heb., kept.

• 23⁶ Again emending the Heb. as the context demands.

• 23⁷ Or, revising the Heb., thorns of the desert.

• 23⁷ A free revision of the text, suggested by Smith, Sam., 382-3, gives the possible reading:

*Nor doth a man labor for them,
Nor fight with iron and spear.*

The text is exceedingly doubtful. The Heb. is followed above.

II Sam. 1 ¹⁷Then David sang this dirge over Saul and Jonathan his son David's dirge ¹⁸(behold, it is written in the Book of Jashar), and said:

Nor rain upon you, O ye fields of death!
For there was the shield of the mighty cast away,

Hurled down upon her own soil she lies, with none to raise her!

§ 20. Jeremiah's Lament over the Impending Fall of Judah, Jer. 9¹⁷⁻²²

Jer. 9 ¹⁷Summon the mourning women that they may come;
And send for the wise women ¹⁸that they may quickly raise for us their voices in wailing;

That our eyes may run down with tears, and our eyelids flow with water.
¹⁹For a sound of wailing is heard from Zion, 'How are we ruined!

§ 17 This is an excellent example of the popular dirge.

§ 18 Cf., for a more highly developed dirge, Ezek. 19.

§ 19 In these dirges the object of the lament is not an individual but the nation. They are a fitting prologue to the longer dirges in Lam. which deal with the same theme.

§ 20 Cf. Vol. III, § 79. for detailed notes. Cf. also Jer. 12⁷⁻¹², Vol. III, § 94, for a similar dirge over sinful Judah.

§ 21. Jehovah's Overwhelming Judgment upon Jerusalem, Lam. 2

Lam. 2 ¹How the Lord hath beclouded in his anger the daughter of Zion !
 He hath cast down from heaven to earth the beauty of Israel,^a
 And he hath not kept in remembrance his footstool in the day of his anger.
²The Lord hath swallowed up without mercy every habitation of Jacob,^b
 He hath thrown down in his wrath the strongholds of the daughter of Judah,
 He hath struck to the ground, he hath polluted her king^c and her princes.
³He hath cut off in the fierceness of his anger^d all of Israel's strength,^e
 He hath drawn back his right hand from before the enemy,
 He hath burnt in Jacob like a flame, which devours on all sides.
⁴He hath bent his bow as an enemy, he hath stood^f as an adversary,
 He hath slain all the desirable men in the tent of Zion,^g
 He hath poured out his fury as fire [on the daughter of Judah].^h ⁵The Lord hath become like an enemy, he hath swallowed up Israel,
 He hath swallowed up all of his palaces, he hath destroyed his fortresses,
 And he hath multiplied in the daughter of Judah sighing and lamentation.

1. Jehovah's dire judgment upon Judah (Lam. 2¹⁻⁵)

⁶He hath torn down as a vineⁱ his dwelling,^j he hath destroyed his assembling place,
 He^k hath caused to be forgotten in Zion, the fast day and the sabbath,
 And hath spurned in his indignant anger, both king and priest.
⁷The Lord hath rejected his altar, he hath abhorred his sanctuary,

2. Also upon the temple and its service (4. 7)

§ 21 The metrical structure of this poem is remarkably symmetrical. Only a few later glosses have crept in to disturb the regular rhythm of the five-beat measure. It falls naturally into two great divisions. Vss. 1-12 describe the fate of the different classes in the community upon whom the calamity had fallen with greatest severity. In the second general division, 13-22, the cause of the great judgment is presented and the nation is called upon to raise its voice in petition to Jehovah for pity, not because divine mercy is deserved but because of the overwhelming character of the judgment. As has been stated in the Introd., p. 19, the date of this poem is between 586 and 561 B.C.

^a2¹ Either the temple or the ark.

^b2² The metrical structure of this vs. is unusual, but no satisfactory reconstruction has been found.

^c2³ So Syr. Heb., the kingdom.

^d2⁴ So. Syr. and Lat. Heb., in fierce anger.

^e2⁵ Lit., horn, as the symbol of strength.

^g2⁷ Lit., the desires of the eye, in the tent of the daughter of Zion, i. e., the citizens of Jerusalem.

^h2⁸ The last part of this vs. that has been lost and is supplied according to the demands of the parallelism from ⁵.

ⁱ2⁹ So Gk. Heb., garden.

^j2¹⁰ Heb., hut; the reference, however, is clearly to the temple and the original probably read as above.

^k2¹¹ The Heb. adds Jehovah, but to preserve the metre in the Eng. it has been omitted.

DIRGES OVER THE FALLEN NATION

⁸Jehovah hath determined to destroy the wall of Zion,^m
He hath stretched out the line, he hath not held back his hand from destroying,
He hath made rampart and wall lament, they mourn together,
⁹Sunk to the ground are her gates,ⁿ broken her bars.
Her king and her princes are among the heathen, and there is no law.
Moreover her prophets receive from Jehovah no vision.
¹⁰Silent, on the earth sit the elders of the daughter of Zion;
Dust they cast on their heads; they are girded with sackcloth;
With heads bowed to earth are the daughters of Jerusalem.

And they have not laid bare thine iniquity, to bring back thy captivity,
But for thee they have beheld oracles that are false and misleading.^x

¹⁶Against thee they open their mouth, even all thine enemies,
They hiss and gnash the teeth; they say, 'We have swallowed her^y up;
Certainly this is the day we looked for; we have found it, we see it!'

¹²⁷ So conjecturally with Budde. Heb. reads wall and her palaces, but the Heb. word for temple is masculine, and palaces are only used in connection with a city. The context supports the above, which may well be the basis of the present Heb.

^m ²⁸ Heb., daughter of Zion.

ⁿ ²⁹ Heb. adds and he hath destroyed; but this is not compatible with the regular metre of the chapter.

^o ²¹¹ Lit., bowels; thought by the Hebrews to be the seat of the sympathetic emotions.

^p ²¹¹ Lit., liver; equivalent in Heb. thought to our modern figurative use of the word heart.

^q ²¹¹ Lit., daughter of my people, i. e., the inhabitants of Jerusalem.

^r ²¹² Supplying a word which a scribe probably confused with the following and so omitted.

^s ²¹² With G. A. Smith supplying a missing word implied by the context.

^t ²¹² Translating the Heb. by the aid of the Lat. and the context.

^u ²¹² Lit., what shall I compare to thee. The Heb. idiom is difficult to transfer into Eng.

^v ²¹⁴ Lit., seen in visions.

^w ²¹⁴ Lit., whitewash.

^x ²¹⁴ Lit., of falsehood and enticement.

^y ²¹⁶ So Gk. and Syr. Heb., him.

^a ²¹⁷ Slightly revising the Heb. as the metre suggests.

^a ²¹⁸ The Heb. is evidently corrupt. The above reading is based on a text emended as the context requires. The VSS. differ widely, showing that the corruption of the text was very old.

^b ²¹⁹ Revising the Heb., which reads wall.

^c ²²⁰ Following a group of Heb. and Gk. MSS. Heb., daughter of thine eyes.

^d ²²¹ Many MSS. read Jehovah.

^e ²²² A scribe who had in mind 1¹⁰ has added the prose gloss who faint for hunger at the head of every street.

^f ²²³ I. e., Jerusalem and its inhabitants. Cf. Job 18¹⁹. The figure was, perhaps, suggested by Jehu's gathering of the unsuspecting Baal worshippers in their temple in order to mete out to them a bloody judgment, II Kgs. 10¹⁸⁻²⁸. The current rendering of the Heb. follows Jer. 42¹⁷, 44¹⁴.

§ 22 Cf., for date and interpretation, Introd., p. 19. This poem pictures even more vividly and feelingly than the preceding the fate of Jerusalem. The poet does not question for a moment the justice of that fate. It is because of the sins of her prophets and priests, ¹⁸. In the magnitude of the disaster which has overtaken his people the poet finds hope that their guilt would be appeased and that the cup of divine judgment which Judah is now drinking to the dregs will soon be passed on to their guilty, arrogant foes, the Edomites, ²¹, ²².

^h ⁴¹ Vs. ¹ is explained by ². The sacred stones and the purest gold are the citizens of Zion.

^b ⁴² Lit., who are weighed against.

Of those in luxury

⁵They who once fed on dainties are desolate in the streets;
They who were reared upon purple embrace dunghills.
⁶So the guilt of the daughter of my people was greater than Sodom's sin,
For she has been overthrown as in a moment, without any hands being wrung for her.¹

Of the nobles

⁷Her nobles¹ were purer than snow, they were whiter than milk;
Their skin was redder than coral,^k their beauty¹ was as sapphire.
⁸Now their appearance is darker than blackness, they are not recognized on the streets,
Their skin cleaves to their bones, it is as dry as a stick.

Of the women

⁹More fortunate are those slain by the sword, than those slain by hunger,
For these pine away, stricken through,^m for want of the fruits of the field.
¹⁰The hands of tender-hearted women have boiled their own children;
They have become their food in the destruction of the daughter of my ¹³It is because of the sins of her prophets, the crimes of her priests,^o

Who have poured out in the midst of her the blood of the righteous.
¹⁴They wander as blind men through the streets, they are polluted with blood,
That men may not touch them they draw aside their garments :
¹⁵'Unclean !'^p they cry to them, 'Depart,^q do not touch';
For they wander and go to and fro^r among the heathen, they no longer sojourn here.

¹⁴⁶ The meaning is doubtful. The above follows the most probable rendering of the Heb. supported by the Gk. The idea is, so quickly did Jerusalem fall that there was no time to lament.

¹⁴⁷ Gk. Nazirites; but the Heb. word elsewhere, as in Gen. 49²⁸, does not have this technical meaning.

^{k47} Slightly emending the text, which in its present form makes no sense. Cf. ^{sb}. Another emendation reads they were more ruddy than branches of coral, but this contradicts the first line.

¹⁴⁷ Lit., polishing.

ⁿ⁴¹³ Lit., all of the inhabitants.

^{o413} Cf. Jer. 6¹³, 8¹⁰, 23¹¹, 13, 26²⁰⁻²².

^{p415} Cf. The warning of lepers, Lev. 13⁴⁵.

^{q415} In the Heb. the 'depart' is repeated three times, but it destroys the metrical structure of the vs.

^{r415} The Heb. is untranslatable. A slight correction on the analogy of Gen. 4¹², 14 gives the above meaning. A scribe has added they say, but it is not supported by the metre or the context.

^{s416} Lit., faces.

^{t416} So Gk. Heb., elders.

^{u417} Or howling. The Heb. text is doubtful.

^{v417} I. e., Egypt.

Lam. 1 ¹See how she sitteth solitary,^f that was once full of people!

The city hath become as a widow, she was mighty among the nations!

A princess among the provinces—she hath become subject to forced labor!

^w 4¹² Adding adversaries, as the metre and context demand. This was probably omitted by a scribe because of its close similarity to the preceding and following words.

^x 4¹³ Again correcting the text as the metre and context demand.

^y 4²⁰ A reference to the capture of King Zedekiah. Cf. Jer. 39⁴⁻⁶.

^z 4²¹ Lit., daughter of Edom.

^a 4²¹ So Gk. The Heb. adds Uz. Cf. Gen. 36²², but the reference is clearly to the Edomite occupation of southern Judah.

^b 4²¹ I. e., the cup of affliction.

^c 4²² Lit., is accomplished.

^e 4²² Lit., daughter of Edom.

§ 23 Cf., for date and authorship of this chap., Introd., p. 20. This poem has a rare tragic beauty and dramatic power. The poet's vision is not limited to Judah or the great catastrophe of 586 B.C., but he surveys broadly the fate that has overtaken his race. The problem uppermost in his mind is how Jehovah's favor may again be won. He declares that it is only through the confession of the nation's sins and appealing to Jehovah's mercy that the nation can win this favor. Accordingly, he puts in the mouth of the nation the confession of guilt and a plea for pity, thus putting in concrete form his counsel and message of consolation.

^f 1¹ The Heb. adds here city; but this destroys the symmetrical metre and has probably been transferred from the second line, where the metre requires it.

^g 1² I. e., her treacherous allies, like Egypt.

^h 1³ The poet apparently has in mind those who fled to Egypt and adjacent lands. Cf. Jer. 40¹¹.

ⁱ 1³ The reference is probably not to the toil under their Bab. masters, but to the pains of the siege and the events following the capture of Jerusalem as the sequel indicates.

^j 1³ I. e., permanent home.

^k 1⁴ I. e., because there are no more pilgrims going up to Jerusalem. Cf. Pss. 42 and 43.

^l 1⁴ I. e., the places of assembly, where private, public, and judicial questions were decided.

^m 1⁴ Gk., are carried away captive.

⁵Her oppressors have gained the ascendancy, her enemies are happy,
For Jehovah hath afflicted her sorely, for the multitude of her crimes;
Her little children have gone into captivity, in the presence of the oppressor.

Her princes have become like harts, that find no pasture,
For they have fled without strength, in the presence of the pursuer.

All who honored her despise her, for they have seen her nakedness,
She also is filled with sighs, and turneth backward.

Therefore she hath fallen^r most horribly, and is without a comforter.

Whether there was ever sorrow like my sorrow, which has come upon me,
How Jehovah hath afflicted me in the day when his wrath was fierce!

¹³From on high hath he sent fire into my bones, and it prevailed against them.

He hath spread a net for my feet, he hath turned me back;
He hath made me to become desolate and faint all the day.

¹⁴Watch is kept over my sins,^v in his hand they are woven together,
As a yoke they come up upon my neck, he undermineth my strength,
The Lord hath delivered me into the hands of those who are irresistible.

¹⁵He hath despised all my mighty ones—the Lord in the midst of me,
He hath called a convocation^w against me to crush my young men;

^a ¹⁷ A glossator has added what he thought was demanded by the context, and of her miseries all her pleasant things which were from the days of old; but these are contrary to the regular metrical and strophic structure of the poem.

^o ¹⁷ Lit., fell into the hand of.

^p ¹⁷ Following the Gk.

^q ¹⁸ Lit., therefore she has become an unclean thing.

^r ¹⁸ Lit., gone down.

^t ¹⁰ Cf. Dt. 23^s for the law against aliens.

^u ¹² A difficult line; a possible rendering would be, O upon me, all ye who pass by, look and see.

^v ¹⁴ Making a slight correction in the later punctuation of this vs.

^w ¹⁵ Lit., solemn assembly. This was usually for religious purposes, but here evidently to execute judgment.

JERUSALEM'S DESOLATION AND GUILT

- The Lord hath trodden as in a wine-press^x the^y daughter of Judah.
¹⁶Because of these things must I weep, mine eyes^z shed tears,
 For far from me is a comforter, who could revive my spirits;^a
 My children^b are completely desolate, for the enemy hath prevailed.
- ¹⁷Zion spreadeth out her hands, there is none^c to comfort her;
 Jehovah hath commanded regarding Jacob, that his adversaries should surround him;^d
 Jerusalem indeed hath become an unclean thing in their eyes.
- ¹⁸Jehovah, he is in the right, for I have rebelled against his command,
 Yet hear ye, all ye peoples, and behold my sorrow;
 My maidens, together with my young men, have gone into captivity.
¹⁹I have called to those who love me, but they also have deceived me;
 My priest and mine elders in the city expire from hunger,^e
 They have sought to find food for themselves, but they have found nothing.^f ²⁰Behold, O Jehovah, for I am in distress, my soul is troubled;
 My heart is disturbed within me,^g for I have grievously rebelled;
 Outside the sword bereaveth, within there is death.
- ²¹Hear^h how I pour forth sighs—there is none to comfort me!
 Mine enemies have all heard of my misfortune, they rejoice that thou hast done it;
 Thou hast brought the dayⁱ that thou hast proclaimed because of all my sins, ²²Let all their wickedness come before thee, and may it be with them as with me;
 Just as thou hast done to me,^j do also to them,
 Since many are my sighs and my heart is faint.

^{e 19} From hunger is not found in the text but is required by the metre and has probably been omitted as the result of a common scribal error.

^{f 19} The second half of the vs. has been retained in the Gk., Syr., and Arabic, together with the gloss, that they might revive their spirits forever, which has taken the place of the original in the Heb.

This poem is an important historical source throwing light upon conditions in the Judean community during the first half of the Persian period. In conclusion it presents the question of why and how long Jehovah will seemingly forget his people. It is the same question that is uppermost in the literature of this period: Mal. 3, Job 3–31, and many pss., e. g., 16 and 22.

^{k 51} Lit., what is to us.

Jehovah's affliction of his servant in the past

¹5²¹ So the parallel in Jer. 31¹⁸ and the demands of the context. The Heb. adds to thee.

§ 25 For the probable date and origin of this poem, cf. Introd. p. 20. This poetic monologue presents a problem that also arises in connection with many pss. of the Psalter. Does the speaker speak for himself or for his nation? The portrait in the first part of the poem has many points of contact with the suffering servant of Jehovah in Is. 42-53 or of Ps. 22. As in those familiar passages, the picture of suffering is superlative and transcends that of the ordinary individual. It is an epitome of Israel's woes in the years following 586 B.C. If we follow the Syr. and certain Heb. MSS. of ¹⁴ the conviction grows that we have here a collective description of the nation's woes, into which the poet has woven the results of his own observation and personal experience. At certain points he turns preacher, as in ²¹⁻²⁹, and sets forth certain fundamental spiritual truths with rare power and winsomeness. In ⁴⁰⁻⁴⁷ he throws off the individual form of address and speaks to and in behalf of the nation. The poem contains many passages of great literary and spiritual beauty.

^u3⁵ Lit., gall. The exact meaning of this vs. is not certain. Many would revise fundamentally.

^x3¹⁴ So Syr. and many MSS. Heb., my people.

^y3¹⁶ Lit., made me bend under the burden.

^z3¹⁷ So Gk. Heb., thou hast. Lit., he hath caused my soul (i. e., me) to reject peace (or welfare).

^a3¹⁹ Punctuating the Heb. slightly differently than in the traditional text which reads remember.

Songs of Love and Marriage.—Cf., for general discussion, Introd., pp. 22-29.

§ 26 Later generations gave to this ps. a messianic interpretation, but it is an unmistakable example of a Hebrew court song. It was evidently written on the occasion of a royal marriage, and was probably sung by the court poet himself during the public festivities. In the first part of the poem the king is addressed, ¹⁻³, and his personal beauty and prowess and the permanence and splendor of his rule are glowingly portrayed. Vs. ⁴ contains an allusion to the royal bride and is followed in the second half of the poem, ¹⁰⁻¹⁷, by an address to the queen in which her new duties, the splendor of her attire and of her train, and the hope that she may have noble offspring are naively but effectively set forth. The poem is introduced by an elaborate exordium, ¹, which is doubtless typical of Hebrew court usage. Similar elaborate introductions are found at the beginning of the royal Balaam oracles in Nu. 24¹ and also in II Sam. 24¹⁻³. The atmosphere of this ps. is evidently that of the joyous days before the Babylonian exile. Although this hymn may later have been regularly sung at royal marriages, there is little doubt that a definite theme and occasion were originally in the poet's mind. It is, of course, possible only conjecturally to identify the king addressed. As Briggs has pointed out (Pss., I, 384, 385), the description of the king in ³⁻⁴ fits remarkably well Jehu, the warrior who unsheathed his sword in behalf of the true worship of Jehovah, with his own right hand pierced the heart of his foes, and by a series of bold acts established himself on the throne of northern Israel. The reference to ivory palaces in ⁸ points also to the northern kingdom and to the days following Ahab, who, according to I Kgs. 22¹⁹, first reared such a structure. Amos also, in his denunciation of conditions in northern Israel, apparently alludes in 6⁴⁻⁵ to the singing of songs—probably similar to the present one—to the accompaniment of musical instruments. It is possible that this hymn was sung later, at the marriage of some king of Judah, as, for example, Josiah. The description of the king is doubtless due in part to the patriotic imagination and adulation which are prominent in the court songs and in the royal portraits that have come down from the court poets and artists of ancient Egypt and Babylonia.

ⁱ45⁶ So Gk. This word is omitted in the Heb., probably as a result of the general confusion of the text. Possibly this last line is a scribal addition. If so, this would explain its present awkward position in the text.

^a45⁶ Heb., God; but the king is the one addressed. The error clearly came because when a later editor changed Jehovah to God he mistook the similar Heb. words will be and Jehovah.

§ 27 For general discussion of the Sg. of Sgs., cf. Introd., pp. 22-29. The scene of this soliloquy and dialogue is evidently the home of the bride. It marks the beginning of the wedding festivities for which she is apparently preparing. Surrounded by her girl friends, who, in keeping with the dramatic customs of the Oriental wedding, are called the daughters of Jerusalem, she throws aside the reserve which shuts the mouth of every unbetrothed maiden in the East and protests her love for her future husband. The scene corresponds very closely to the ante-nuptial parade songs recited by the bride and her attendants in the modern Palestinian wedding, as reported by Dalmann and already quoted. Cf. p. 25. Similarly in the next song the bridegroom himself is introduced. The chief difference between the biblical and the modern songs is that here, as throughout the Sg. of Sgs., the author with rare effectiveness makes the bride the chief speaker. In these poems we have not mere stereotyped wedding refrains but genuine love-songs that recall the similar poems of Theocritus and of the east-Jordan poet Meleager, who wrote in classic Gk. Cf. Anthol. Palatina, V, 160. True, pure love breathes through them—the love that a betrothed bride should properly feel for her future husband. The purpose of these two opening songs, as the closing refrain in 3⁵ possibly suggests, was to awaken such a love in the heart of the bride.

^a 1² Certain interpreters would change the Heb. in this line so as to make it a direct address as in the second line. It is more natural, however, to interpret it as it is and to regard it as the poet's index that the lover is not present except in the heart of the bride. She feels his presence, however, so strongly that her words naturally pass from the third to the second person in the succeeding line.

^b 1⁴ So Syr. Possibly the Heb. represents the original, for it retains the third person as in 2^a.

^c 1⁵ Many interpreters assign all of this vs. to the bride, but there is an unmistakable element of contrast which strongly suggests the second half of the first two lines were spoken by the daughters of Jerusalem, to whom the bride addresses her words. Her modesty as revealed throughout the book renders it exceedingly difficult to place the closing sentence in each of these lines upon her lips. Some commentators, recognizing the difficulty, revise the text in the second half of the second line so as to read Salama instead of Solomon.

^d 1⁶ This reference to her brothers is further illuminated by ^e and 8^e.

Lover's address to his bride

Sg. of Sgs. 1 ⁹I have compared thee, O my friend, to aⁱ steed in Pharaoh's

¹⁰Thy cheeks are comely with spangles,^j thy neck with jewels.^k

¹¹We will make thee spangles of gold, with studs of silver.

Bride's

tion

love

¹²While the king sat on his divan^l my spikenard sent forth its fragrance.

¹³My beloved is to me a bundle of myrrh that lieth between my breasts;

¹⁴My beloved is to me a cluster of henna flowers^m in the vineyards of Engedi.

^a ¹⁸ I. e., probably her own beauty.

^f ¹⁷ The exact interpretation of this and the following vs. is not clear. Certain interpreters regard it as secondary. The songs as a whole imply that the girl's lover was a shepherd. Her words are probably intended to express her passionate desire to be with him at all times.

^g ¹⁷ So Syr., Sym., and Lat. This reading is supported by the context. The traditional Heb. reading, veiled, is due to the mistaken transposition of two letters. The meaning evidently is, Why should I be like a vagrant wanton, going from flock to flock in quest of my lover?

^h ¹⁸ It is not entirely clear who utters this vs. In the light of the immediately preceding context, however, it is probably the bride's attendants.

§ 28 The sudden change of metre from the three to the five beat measure suggests that here a new song begins. The lover, who was apparently absent from the preceding dialogue, speaks, describing in characteristically Oriental yet reserved terms the beauty of his bride to be. To-day the Arab poet can pay no higher tribute to the beauties of his wife than to liken her to his stately steed. Vs. ¹² introduces a corresponding three-line stanza in which the bride, in exquisitely delicate terms, responds by describing how precious to her is the love which she cherishes for her lover. The next stanza contains a beautiful dialogue abounding in concrete yet felicitous comparisons in which the bride protests that she is but a simple flower of the plains. Her lover with restraint—for he still addresses her as his friend rather than bride—but with marvellous felicity, declares that though she is but a simple peasant girl she is far more beautiful than her attendant friends and that she is well fitted to adorn the palace in which their shepherd life is to be spent, for that palace is the greensward and the pillared forests. Each with rare aptness takes up and carries on the figure suggested by the other. In the concluding stanzas the bride develops the figure of the apple tree and, with reserve and delicacy, expresses her eagerness for the consummation of their approaching marriage. The concluding vs. contains the refrain three times repeated in the poem, cf. 3^a, 5^a, and addressed to her attendants. It is evidently intended to emphasize the importance of letting love grow spontaneously with that simplicity and freedom of which the gazelles and the fallow deer that leap over the plain are the fitting symbol.

ⁱ ¹⁹ Heb., my.

^j ¹¹⁰ Possibly the Heb. is to be interpreted plaits (of hair). It describes that which was flattened. The next line, however, favors the reading spangles which perhaps corresponded to the coins which are worn across her forehead and hanging down on her cheeks by the modern Palestinian bride.

^k ¹¹⁰ The Heb. word is found only here and probably means strings of beads or of jewels.

^l ¹¹² Lit., something round. The reference is either to a table or a divan.

^m ¹¹⁴ Fragrant whitish flowers growing in clusters, like grapes.

^a1⁵ Through a mistake of the scribe the words behold thou art fair have been repeated in the Heb. and destroy the metre.

^o1⁶ As in ¹⁵ in the Heb. the thought of the first clause has been repeated: verily thou art lovely.

^p2³ The figure of the apple tree, with its beautiful flowers and its grateful shade and its pleasant fruit, is especially felicitous. The figure is carried on in the soliloquy of the bride which follows.

^q2⁸ It is probable that the poet for emphasis purposely opened this most beautiful of spring-time songs with a four-beat couplet.

^r2⁹ Slightly revising the Heb.

^s2¹⁰ The Lat. adds my dove in the first part and the Gk. in the latter part of this line, showing the tendency to expand which has probably led a later editor to introduce my love from ¹¹, thereby destroying the measure.

^t2¹² In our land is added.

^{u213} A scribe has added, destroying the metre, the explanatory words in bloom. Its lack of syntactical connection with the context reveals its secondary character.

^{v215} Heb. adds My beloved is mine, and I am his, as he feeds among the lilies. This was probably introduced from 6³ where it fits rather than interrupts the context.

^{w217} Restoring from the parallel passage in 8¹⁴. Heb., Bether. This makes no sense.

^{x31} Possibly this line was introduced by mistake from ².

^{y34} Adding him and joining him whom I love (lit., him whom my soul loves) to the next line as the metre demands.

^{z34} By many this awkward line is regarded as a scribal expansion. Cf. 8² with which it is apparently inconsistent.

Bridegroom's description
of the
beauty

§ 30 The opening stanzas of this song introduce the bridegroom advancing with his attendants to claim his bride. In keeping with the Palestinian wedding customs, he is spoken of as King Solomon; his attendants are described as mighty warriors corresponding to the royal bodyguard. In imagination he is clad and attended with royal splendor. It is not clear who is speaking in the second stanza. It may possibly have been the bride, but more probably it was the people or some one of the wedding-guests who answered the question of the people and called the attention of the daughters of Jerusalem (the bride's attendants) to the approach of the bridegroom on this his wedding-day. The scene is evidently before the home of the bride and the hour is in the early evening, when the Oriental wedding festivities began.

The stanzas which follow represent the bridegroom's praise of his bride. It corresponds to the wass of the bridegroom in the modern Palestinian weddings. The description is characteristically concrete and typically Oriental. It begins with praise of her eyes and hair. A description of her bodily charms then follows. It was the one occasion when, in the social life of the East, such a description was deemed proper and appropriate. Its spirit, however, is chaste. It is followed by a highly poetic passage in which the bridegroom requests the bride to leave her home and become his wife. It is significant that, whereas in 4¹. ⁷ the bridegroom employs as earlier the more formal term friend in addressing the object of his affections, in ⁹ and ¹⁰ he for the first time uses the term bride. The bride is described under the figure of a garden, even as in modern Arabic poetry. Using the same figure, and with great delicacy, the bride in ¹⁰ expresses her willingness to enter into the marriage relation. The song ends with an address to the assembled guests by the bridegroom. This corresponds to the refrain in which the bride addressed her attendants at the conclusion of the earlier songs.

^a3^a The brevity of this line is probably in order to make it more impressive.

^b3¹¹ The Heb. adds daughters of Zion, but this destroys the metre and is evidently a scribal duplicate of the term daughters of Jerusalem, which, in the current division of the vss., is connected with ¹⁰ and introduced by from.

^c3¹¹ Heb. adds in the day of the gladness of his heart; this, however, is probably but a scribal duplicate of the preceding phrase in the day of his espousals.

^d4¹ Supplying the verb implied by the preposition.

^e4¹ So certain Heb. MSS. and Gk. Heb., along the side of Mount Gilead. The goats of Palestine are, as a rule, black, and the poet's figure describes the bride's black, waving locks.

WEDDING-SONGS

²Thy teeth are like a flock of shorn^f ewes coming up from the washing,
Every one of which hath twins, and none is bereaved.

³Thy lips are like a thread of scarlet, and thy mouth is comely,
Thy temples are like a piece of pomegranate² behind thy veil.

⁴Thy neck is like the tower of David built for an armory,
On which hang a thousand bucklers, all the shields of the warriors.^h

⁵Thy twoⁱ breasts are like two fawns that are twins of a gazelle.^j ⁷Thou art altogether fair, my friend; verily thou art spotless.

⁸Come with me from Lebanon, my bride,^k from Lebanon,
From the top of Amana, my sister, from the top of Senir and Hermon,^l
From the den of lions, from the mount where the leopards prowl.^m

⁹Thou hast captured my heart, O my sister, my brideⁿ
With one glance of thine eyes, with one chain on^o thy neck.^p ¹⁰How fair is thy love, O my sister, my bride!

How much better is thy love than wine,
And the fragrance of thine oils than all kinds of spices!

¹¹Thy lips, O my bride, drop as the honeycomb,
Honey and milk are under thy tongue;
And the smell of thy garments is like the smell of Lebanon.

¹²A garden enclosed is my sister, my bride;
A spring shut up, a fountain sealed.

¹³Thy shoots are a pomegranate park, with precious fruits:
Henna with spikenard plants, spikenard and saffron,

¹⁴Calamus and cinnamon, with all trees of frankincense,
Myrrhs and aloes, with all the chief spices.

¹⁵A fountain of the gardens, a well of living waters,
And flowing streams from Lebanon art thou.^q

¹⁶Awake, O north wind; and come, thou south;
Blow upon my garden that its spices may flow out;
Let my beloved enter his garden, and eat his precious fruits.

^{14^h} I. e., pearly white, symmetrical, and complete.

^{24^h} The reference is to the delicate veining.

^{h4^h} The meaning is exceedingly doubtful. The current translation given above is based on implications of the context. The reference is probably to the adornments and especially to the golden spangles referred to in 1¹¹.

^{14^h} Possibly two, which is superfluous in the Heb., is due to a scribal repetition.

^{14^h} Heb. adds which feed among the lilies; but this makes no sense and is, without reasonable doubt, a scribal insertion from 2¹⁶. The same scribe has apparently introduced from the same context, 2¹⁷, the vs.:

Until the day be cool and the shadows flee away,

I will get me to the mountain of myrrh, to the hill of frankincense.

Vs. 7 is the natural sequel of 5, while the inserted vs. 6 is out of harmony with the bridegroom's invitation in 8.

^{h4^h} So Gk., Lat., and Syr. Cf. 9. Heb. repeats with me.

^{14^h} This vs. suggests the ancient form of marriage by capture and flight.

^{m4^h} Lit., mount of the leopards.

^{24^h} Heb. repeats thou hast captured my heart.

^{o4^h} Lit., of thy neck; i. e., the necklace on thy fair neck.

^{p4^h} Possibly the original read:

Thou hast captured my heart, with one of thine eyes

Thou hast captured my heart with one charm on thy neck.

§ 31 This song contains the bride's impassioned description of her love for the bridegroom and of his physical charms. It corresponds to the bridegroom's description of her charms in the preceding song. Like the similar song in 2¹-3⁵, it is in part a monologue. Its object is evidently to indicate the intensity of the love which burns in her heart. Her description of her lover which follows is provoked by the question of her attendants. The bridegroom does not appear in person in this song until the close. As in the second song, 2¹-3⁵, she is alone with her attendants in whose presence her frank expression of her love is appropriate. While her concrete description of the physical characteristics of the bridegroom does not appeal to Western taste, it is thoroughly chaste and full of Oriental charm.

¹5¹ Lit., hole of the door through which one reached to lift the latch.

 Washed with milk, well set, and full orbed.^t
¹³His cheeks are a bed of spices; banks of sweet herbs;^u
 His lips are lilies, dropping liquid myrrh.
¹⁴His hands are rings of gold set with beryl,^v
 His body is ivory work overlaid with sapphires.
¹⁵His legs are marble pillars, set upon golden sockets.

Effect upon her attendants

6 ¹Whither is thy beloved gone, O thou fairest among women?

- ²My beloved is gone down to his garden, to the beds of spices,
 In order that he may feed in the gardens, and there gather lilies.
³I am my beloved's and my beloved is mine, as he feeds among the lilies.

⁹My dove, my undefiled, is but one!
 She is the only one of her mother, the choice one of her who bore her.

^a 5¹¹ The Heb. adds a doubtful word usually translated bushy, but it is probably secondary.

^t 5¹² The exact meaning of the Heb. is not known. The translation is based on the root meanings of the Heb. words.

^u 5¹³ Lit., balsam.

^v 5¹⁴ Lit., the Tarshish stone.

^w 5¹⁶ Or, revising the text slightly, Behold he is.

§ 32 This song, chiefly devoted to a description of the charms of the bride, corresponds to the preceding description of the bridegroom. As in the third song, 3⁴-5¹, the bridegroom advanced in regal state, so now the bride advances. She is first addressed by the bridegroom. The opening stanza is largely a duplicate of the bridegroom's praise of the bride in 4¹-5¹. Possibly it is secondary, and the original song, like the corresponding one in 3⁸-11, began with a question of the assembled guests. Here the bride evidently appears before the guests, clad in all her finery, and possibly brandishing a sword, as in the corresponding scene in the modern east-Jordan wedding ceremony, and dances, while they chant her charms. It is significant that the remarkably free description of her physical beauty in 7¹-8 begins with her feet and concludes with a reference to her tresses, in which the king, i. e., the bridegroom, is held captive. The brief dialogue between the bridegroom and bride at the end apparently concludes the public wedding ceremony.

^x 6⁴ Tirzah, for a brief time after the death of Solomon, the capital of northern Israel, is probably to be identified with the modern Teiasir, twelve miles northeast of Samaria. It stood on a commanding height in the midst of fertile fields.

^z 6⁷ Cf. 4⁸.

^a 6⁸ Following Budde (Komm. 32) in emending the text in the light of 8¹¹. A scribe familiar with the statement in I Kgs. 11³ that Solomon had 700 wives and 300 concubines has added and virgins without number.

^b6⁹ Supplying of Jerusalem, implied by the context and demanded by the metre.

^c6¹² This line is almost hopelessly corrupt. Many emendations have been suggested but none is convincing. The above reading is obtained simply by deleting the Heb. word commonly translated my people.

^d6¹³ Heb. repeats turn, turn; but this is probably due to dittography, for it destroys the metre.

^e6¹⁴ Heb., as upon the dance of Mahanaim. A slightly different punctuation of the Heb. gives the reading two camps or camps. The allusion is apparently to the military dances that might be seen at the warriors' camp.

^f7⁴ Cf. 4⁴ for the same figure. The last end of the line has apparently been lost, as the parallel passage in 4⁴ indicates.

^g7⁴ Completing this broken line by transferring ⁵ which is inconsistent with its context. Heb. adds upon thee.

^h7⁵ Lit., hair of thy head.

ⁱ7⁶ So Syr. Lit., daughter of delights. Through a slight error the Heb. reads for delights.

^j7⁷ Possibly this is secondary.

^k7⁸ Heb. adds of the vine; but this was probably appended by a scribe who lacked metrical sense.

^l7⁹ This vs. is practically untranslatable as it stands. It has evidently suffered in transmission. The current translation, that goeth down smoothly for my beloved, gliding through the lips of those that are asleep, puts these words in the mouth of the bride; but the translation and interpretation are both doubtful. The first part is probably a scribal addition. A slight revision of the latter part gives the above reading, which is in harmony with the meaning and metre.

^m7¹¹ Heb. adds the field; but it is loosely connected with the context and probably a scribal expansion.

WEDDING-SONGS

Whether its blossom is open, and the pomegranates are in flower;

²I would lead thee into^p my mother's house, and she would instruct me;

Under the apple tree I awakened thee;
There thy mother was in travail with thee,
There was she in travail who bore thee.

⁶Place me as a seal upon thy heart,
Set me as a seal-ring^s upon thine arm;
For love is as strong as death;
Jealousy is as irresistible as Sheol;
Its flames are flames of fire,
A very flame of Jehovah.^t

⁷Many waters cannot extinguish love,
Neither can floods ever drown it.
If a man should give all his wealth for love,
He would be utterly despised.

^a 7¹² This half line is regarded as secondary by many, but it furnishes the natural complement to ¹⁰ which otherwise is isolated.

^o 7¹³ Mandrakes appear to have been regarded by the ancients as the symbols of love.

^p 8² Heb. adds bring thee. The absence of the connective indicates that it is a later insertion.

^q 8² A scribe has added in the Heb., from 2⁶, let his hand be under my head, and his right hand embrace me. His object was possibly to interpret the obscure vs. which precedes. The simple, natural interpretation is, on the whole, the most satisfactory.

§ 33 This song marks the consummation of the wedding ceremony: the conducting of the bride to the home of her future husband. The poet, with consummate dramatic art, has objectified and interpreted this concluding act by means of a dialogue between the bride and the bridegroom. As in 3⁶ and 6¹⁰, it is introduced by a question raised by the people. The powerful description of true marital love in 6. 7 was apparently the marriage oath uttered by the bride as she entered the home of her husband. In protesting that she possesses that purity which is essential to a faithful marriage, she quotes an earlier conversation between her brothers. In conclusion she declares that she is well content with humble life, though it is in striking contrast to the splendor of Solomon which had furnished the imagery for the marriage ceremonies.

^s 8⁶ The original may have read bracelet. In the translation the implied verbal idea has been expressed.

^t 8⁶ I. e., a divine, irresistible flame.

The Kingly Psalms of the Psalter.—The first group of kingly ps. consists of prayers or litanies apparently uttered when the king or ruler to which each refers was still living. They are without reasonable doubt the oldest group of ps. in the Psalter. Inasmuch as the king is the chief representative of the nation, the psalmists have incorporated in these ps. the noblest patriotic hopes of their age. In this group the national and material hopes which are frankly expressed, for example, in the early Balaam oracles, Nu. 23⁷⁻¹⁰, 18-24, 24²⁻⁹, 15-19, are combined with the nobler ethical ideals so clearly set forth by the great prophets of the eighth and seventh centuries B.C. Progress toward a more ethical and spiritual kingly ideal is clearly discernible when the ps. are arranged in their chronological order.

§ 34 The aspirations expressed in this ps. are closely related to those found in the Balaam oracles. It is full of youthful vigor and energy. It is apparently a litany, chanted by the priestly singers in the temple courts while an offering was being presented by the king. The one addressed in the opening stanza is the king, who was probably present, surrounded by his warriors. Three reasons are urged why Jehovah should give deliverance and victory: the first is his character and unique relation to the people in behalf of whose king the prayer is uttered; the second is the rich sacrifice, including both cereal and whole burnt offerings, which the king had probably caused to be presented to his divine Lord while this litany was being sung; the third is the vow of the priestly singers that if Jehovah will grant deliverance they will repay him with the gift of song and praise. It is the naïve, childish conception of Jehovah and of religion which here confronts us. The confident joyousness of the pre-exilic period is everywhere in evidence. The absence of the detailed references to persons, found, e. g., in the song of Deborah and in David's lament over Saul and Jonathan, indicates that the litany was probably written to be used whenever the need for it arose. It may come from the days of Jehoshaphat or Amasiah or Uzziah or possibly Josiah. Its background is an hour of stress, when the self-sufficiency that characterized most of Judah's rulers was shaken; but its confident tone implies that it was written before the Assyrian and Babylonian armies had broken the strength of the Hebrews. In any case, it is one of the earliest ps. of the Psalter and is an excellent example of the pre-exilic royal hymn.

^a 20³ Lit., accept as fat.

^b 20³ So Syr., Targ., and certain Heb. MSS. The standard Heb. text has the singular.

ⁱ20⁷ So Gk. Heb. adds Jehovah.

^e20⁸ Gk. and Lat., answer us.

^h20⁸ Lit., on the day of our calling.

§ 35 In structure and thought this ps. is closely related to 20. Its second vs. is an echo of 20⁴. The same king evidently originally figured in both. The one ps. is perhaps a litany to be sung before battle and the other a Te Deum to be sung after the victory had been won. The allusions, however, in 21 are not to a definite event but are general. Not merely victory in war but the conferring of the blessings which every Heb. king desired are described in the opening stanza. The warlike note is much stronger in the second main stanza where the king is directly addressed, even as in the first stanza of 20. The ps. presents a noble though warlike kingly ideal. It is the portrait not of a tyrant but of a king who, true to the Hebrew ideal, ruled as the viceroy of Jehovah and the servant of the people. The ps. consists of two stanzas of twelve lines each followed by a refrain of two lines which was probably sung by the people in unison.

^l21¹ Possibly this should (with Briggs, Pss., I, 183), here and throughout the ps., be translated victory.

^j21¹ So Gk., Syr., and Lat.

^k21⁴ Cf., for a similar request, I Sam. 10²⁴, II Sam. 16¹⁸, I Kgs. 1²⁸.

^m21⁹ Or, revising the Heb. to bring it into closer harmony with the context, Thou wilt put them in a furnace of fire (so Briggs, Pss., I, 183).

THE GOD-GIVEN MIGHT OF ISRAEL'S KING

The Lord, in his anger, will swallow them,
 And the fire of his wrath will devour them.
¹⁰Their offspring thou wilt destroy from the earth,
 And their descendants from among the sons of men.

³For thou art a refuge for me, a strong tower from the presence of the enemy.
⁴I will be a guest in thy tent forever; I will take refuge under the cover of thy wings.

^o21¹² Gk. and Lat., mighty deeds.

§ 36 Vs. ¹ of this ps. suggests that the author was an exile; but the declaration that he will call upon Jehovah even from the ends of the earth may be but a superlative expression of his confidence that Jehovah is able to help him wherever he is. The figures of the rock, of the strong tower, and of being Jehovah's guest in his tent point to the earlier and simpler days rather than to the later. In Ps. 23 the psalmist looks forward to dwelling in Jehovah's temple rather than in his tent, as here. The vow was also a prominent pre-exilic institution. The reference to the king in ⁶⁻⁸ is alone satisfied by a pre-exilic setting, for he is a Hebrew ruler. Vs. ¹ implies that it was a collective ps. It was a prayer equally fitting for the individual or the community, although the reference to the king emphasized its public character. In the light of all the facts, it may, with 20 and 21, be assigned to a pre-exilic date. The days of Jeremiah and Josiah furnish a fitting background. The original reading, Jehovah, which was changed by a later editor to God, has been restored.

^p61¹² Gk., Lat., and Syr., On the rock mayest thou lift me up. But Heb., Syr., Old Lat., and Targ. read as above.

^q61¹⁶ Slightly correcting the Heb., which reads, heritage.

^r61¹⁶ Again revising the obscure Heb.

⁴May he vindicate the afflicted among the people,
May he help the sons of the needy.[¶]
⁵May he fear thee[¶] while the sun endureth,
As long as the moon shineth, even forever.

Like rain-drops that water the earth.
⁷May righteousness[×] flourish in his days,
And abundant peace until the moon be no more.

⁸May he rule from sea to sea,

¹²For he delivereth the needy who cry,

§ 37 At least a century of remarkable moral and religious development apparently lies between this ps. and 20 and 21. Here the ideals of Am., Hos., and Is. are woven into a majestic royal ode. Like the laws in Dt. 17¹⁴⁻²⁰, which define the duties of a Heb. ruler to his subjects, this ps. was evidently written in order to place before the king worthy ideals to guide him in his rule. It recalls the poem of the Egyptian prophet Ipuwer, who lived not long after 2000 B.C. After describing the overthrow of existing political and social evils, this Egyptian forerunner of the Heb. prophets declared that a just king would arise who would smite evil when he raises his arm against it. Josiah was the only king in Judah's later history who, even in part, realized the social ideals set forth in this wonderful ps. Of him Jeremiah declared, He executed law and justice; he judged the cause of the poor and needy (Jer. 22^{15, 16}). Evidently Josiah's benign policy was in the mind of the psalmist. The description in 12-14 fits no other Heb. ruler so well—not even David. Ps. 72 is the poetic counterpart of the book of Dt., which comes from the same period. The poetry in 8-11 is the antithesis of that of the Prince of Peace pictured in the remainder of the ps. It voices Israel's narrow national prejudices and selfish ambitions. The immediate sequel of 1-7 is 12-14. In the light of these facts it is possible that 8-11 came from the hands of a later editor who missed the promise of world-wide dominion which is found in the primitive Balaam oracle and which seemed to him more important than the visions of justice and mercy that were to mark the rule of Jehovah's king.

Little wonder that the Christian world has long regarded this ps. as messianic. It so far transcends anything realized by even the best of Israel's rulers that it points unmistakably to the future. It is a marvellous foreshadowing of the divine purpose to be realized in human society. It is by no means an exact portrait of Jesus, the Prince of Peace; but it nobly formulates certain of the social ideals which he strove to implant in the minds of his followers.

[†]72¹ So Gk., Lat., and Syr. Heb., judgments.

[‡]72³ Slightly correcting the Heb. and adding the verb implied by the context.

[¶]72⁴ The Heb. adds and may he crush the oppressor. This is a later insertion, for it is not grammatically or logically connected with the context and is not metrically complete.

[¶]72⁵ Following the Gk. Heb., may they fear thee.

[×]72⁷ So certain MSS., Gk., Lat., and Syr. Heb., a righteous man.

^f72¹⁹ Vss. 18, 19 are the doxology with which this section of the Psalter closes. The Heb. adds the prayers of David the son of Jesse are ended.

§ 38 As Briggs has shown (Pss., II, 250-254), Ps. 89 consists of two and possibly three originally independent poems. This is evinced by the different metre employed and by the dissimilar themes treated in different parts of the ps. The older ps., written in the three-beat measure, based on the traditional covenant with David recorded in II Sam. 7⁸⁻¹⁶, and emphasising the contrast between the promise and the fate of the reigning house of Judah, is clearly the older literary unit. In theme and style it is closely parallel to the older poems in the book of Lam. The description in 22-23 implies that the psalmist was personally acquainted with the king whose fate he bewailed. It describes well either Jehoiachin or Zedekiah. Vs. 4 perhaps fits best the ill-fated ^a89¹⁷ The editor who combined the two ps. in 89 has added for at the beginning of this line and transformed the original our required by the parallelism into his.

DIVINE PROMISES TO DAVID AND HIS SUCCESSORS

¹⁹Once^b thou didst speak in a vision
 To thy holy one,^c and didst say:
 I have placed a crown^d upon a hero,^e
 I have exalted one chosen from the people;
²⁰I found David my servant,
 With my holy oil I anointed him;
²¹With whom my hand is established,
 Mine arm also doth strengthen him.
²²I made a covenant with my chosen one;^f
 I swore to David my servant:
²³'I will establish thy seed forever,
 And build thy throne for all generations.'

²⁴The enemy shall not exact^g from him,
 The wrong-doers^h shall not afflict him.
²⁵And I will crush his adversaries before him,
 And I will smite down those who hate him.
²⁶But my faithfulness and lovingkindness shall be with him,
 And through my name shall his horn be exalted.
²⁷I will set his hand also on the sea,
 And his right hand on the rivers.ⁱ
²⁸He shall cry to me, 'Thou art my father,
 My God, and the rock of my salvation.'
²⁹I will also make him my first-born,
 Most high above the kings of earth.
³⁰My lovingkindness will I keep for him forevermore,
 And my covenant shall stand fast for him.
³¹His seed will I preserve forever,
 And his throne as the days of heaven.

³²If his sons forsake my law,
 And walk not in my judgments,
³³If they profane my statutes,
 And keep not my commands;
³⁴Then will I visit their transgressions with a rod,
 And their iniquity with stripes.

Zedekiah. The later editor, in the process of reconstruction, evidently transferred ³, ⁴ from their original position after ²¹ and injected them into the midst of a later poem written in the four-beat measure describing Jehovah's might and goodness. This wonderfully symmetrical and powerful song of adoration is found in ¹, ², ³-¹⁰. Cf. § 94. To the royal hymn which comes from the earlier part of the Babylonian exile, the final editor of the ps., who probably lived in the Gk. period not long before the beginning of the Maccabean struggle, has appended a four-beat poem, in ⁴⁰-⁵¹, bewailing the fate that had overtaken Jehovah's people, and especially the faithful in the Jewish community.

^b 89¹⁹ Lit., then, i. e., referring to the promises to David recorded in II Sam 7¹-¹⁶.

^c 89¹⁹ So certain Heb. MSS. Heb., holy ones. The reference is clearly to Nathan. Cf. II Sam. 7⁴.

^d 89¹⁹ Correcting the Heb. which reads, probably through a scribal error, help.

^e 89¹⁹ I. e., David, the mighty warrior.

^f 89²² Cf. the natural antecedent in ¹⁹.

^g 89²² So Gk. and a possible translation of the Heb. Syr. and Lat., come treacherously upon.

^h 89²² Lit., son of wrong. The Heb. phrase clearly has a collective meaning.

ⁱ 89²³ If the plural is retained it refers to the Tigris as well as the Euphrates, and probably includes the connecting canals.

THE SAD CONTRAST

³³But my lovingkindness will I not remove^j from thee,
 I will not belie^k my faithfulness.
³⁴I will not profane my covenant,
 Nor alter that which hath issued from my lips.
³⁵Once have I sworn by my holiness,
 Verily, I will not lie unto David.
³⁶His seed shall endure forever,
 And his throne as the sun before me,
³⁷As the moon shall it be established forever,
 Even as long as^l the sky is firm.

³⁸But thou hast cast off and rejected,
 Thou hast been exceedingly wroth with thine anointed.
³⁹Thou hast spurned the covenant of thy servant,
 Thou hast profaned his crown to the ground.
⁴⁰Thou hast broken down his fences,
 Thou hast made his fortresses a ruin.
⁴¹All the passersby rob him,
 He hath become an object of reproach to his neighbors.
⁴²Thou hast exalted the right hand of his adversaries,
 Thou hast made all his enemies rejoice.
⁴³Yea, thou hast turned back^m his sword,
 And thou hast not made him stand in battle.
⁴⁴Thou hast made his lustre to cease,ⁿ
 And flung down his throne to the ground.
⁴⁵Thou hast shortened the days of his youth,
 Yea, thou hast covered him with shame.

⁴⁶How long, O Jehovah, wilt thou hide thyself?
 Shall thy wrath forever burn like fire?
⁴⁷Remember, O Lord,^o the duration of life;^p
 For what vanity hast thou created all the sons of men!
⁴⁸What man is there who shall live and not see death,
 Who can deliver his life from the power of Sheol?
⁴⁹O Lord, where are thy former acts of kindness,
 Which thou didst swear to David in thy faithfulness?
⁵⁰Remember, O Lord, the reproach of thy servants,

§ 39 This ps., like 1, has no superscription. It was clearly given its present position as an introduction to the collection of Davidic ps. which follows in 3-41. Its basis is the covenant and promise made to David according to II Sam. 7¹¹⁻¹⁶. In ⁷ the psalmist puts in the mouth of the king the promise of II Sam. 7^{14a}, I will be to him a father, and he shall be to me a son. The poet assumes as his historical background the period after David had established his dynasty at Jerusalem and had subjugated the surrounding nations. It is apparently in David's mouth, as the representative of Israel's reigning house, that the poet puts the words in ⁷⁻⁹, which embody his messianic hopes. These contemplate the world-wide rule of the messianic king. The great kingdoms of Assyria, Babylonia, and Persia, and the repeated rebellions of the subject peoples, are evidently before the psalmist's mind. To him the splendors and glory, which the Chronicler projected back into the days of David and Solomon, lie in the future. Not the sword but Jehovah's might is to bring about this consummation.

The ps. apparently reflects the broadened vision that came with the experiences of the exile; but it is difficult to date it with assurance. Except for the presence of several Aram. words, the language is free from indications of late influence. Israel's outlook is hopeful. On the distant horizon are great national rebellions. The opening days of the reign of Darius, when every messenger brought reports of a new rebellion and when, as we learn from the sermons of Haggai and Zechariah, cf. Hag. 2²⁰⁻²², Zech. 2, the Jews hoped that a Davidic king would speedily arise in their midst and set up a world-wide kingdom, furnish the most satisfactory setting. This is also in harmony with its position at the head of the earliest Davidic collection of ps. Cf. Intro., p. 45.

The ps. is remarkably symmetrical and falls into four stanzas of approximately seven lines each. The strophic parallelism is most marked: the first and fourth are synonymous and stand in the antithetic relation to the second and third, which are synonymous.

The hopes of the ps. never found their complete realization in Israel's history; but the absolute trust in Jehovah and in the ultimate victory of the right that pervades it lifts it above all local conditions and gives it a universal significance which finds its true realization in the kingdom of God established by Jesus.

^{a2} The usual conjectural rendering of this rare verb, rage, is not supported by the present context or the obvious meaning of the noun derived from the same root in 55¹⁴ and 64², where the parallelism requires throng or conspiracy. Cf. Dan. 6⁶. ¹¹, assemble together.

^{b2} Some commentators would revise the text to read, contrive plots, on the strength of the parallelism, but the accepted reading expresses hostile action.

^{c2} The Gk. reads, I was set by him.

^{d2} Possibly the first two lines should be emended to read, I have said, Thou art my son. Cf. the gospel use of this passage in Mk. 1¹¹, 9²⁻³, also Rom. 1⁴, Acts 13³⁵. This vs. contains an echo of the old Semitic formula of adoption. Cf. Code of Hammurabi, § 170.

^{e2} The Heb. adds ask of me; but this introduces two extra beats into the line and interrupts the thought. It seems to be a later toning down of the strong messianic promise.

JEHOVAH'S CARE FOR HIS KING

⁹With an iron rod shalt thou break them in pieces,^z

^z ²⁹ Or, rule as shepherd; but the parallelism favors the above reading.

^y ²¹⁰ Lit., judges, but the term is evidently used as in Judges for rulers.

^a ²¹¹ Or, revising the text, submit yourselves to him. The Gk. retains the in him required by the metre.

^b ²¹² So Sym. and Old Lat. The rendering, kiss the son, makes no sense and arose through the influence of the Aramaic. The Heb. means, lit., kiss purely, as in Job 31²⁷. Cf. also I Kgs. 19¹⁸ and Hos. 13², the reference is to adoration and worship. A plausible emendation reads, kiss him, i. e., worship him.

^c ²¹² So Gk. The Heb. omits right but the metre requires it.

^d ²¹² This line is possibly a later liturgical addition, since it has no real connection with the rest of the ps., and especially the preceding lines, which refer not to the afflicted who need a refuge but to the rulers of the earth.

§ 40 This vigorous, stately, highly poetic ps. breathes the warlike spirit of the Maccabean era. Evidently the tide of battle has turned in favor of the Jews, and they are already rejoicing in the attainment of political independence. Although brief, it is full of allusions to Israel's earlier hopes and conditions. The figure in ⁴ is based on the late Jewish tradition in Gen. 14. According to I Mac. 14⁴¹, Simon and his descendants were assured the high-priesthood forever. Like the ancient priest-king of Gen. 14, he combined both civil and religious authority. The initial letters of ^{1b}, ², ³, and ⁴ spell the name Simon, the last of the sons of Mattathias, whose achievements and reign, as suggested in this ps., correspond closely to the detailed record of I Mac. There is little doubt, therefore, that this is a Maccabean ps. It may be dated with assurance in the year 141 B.C., when Simon was proclaimed high priest, general, and governor of the Jews and the priests, and protector of all. I Mac. 14⁴⁷.

^d ¹¹⁰² Dividing the vs. as the metre and parallelism demand.

^e ¹¹⁰³ I. e., come forward and join the ranks readily when the army is mustered.

^f ¹¹⁰³ So Lat. and Aquila. The Heb. adds in holy array; but this destroys the metre and is clearly a later gloss.

^g ¹¹⁰³ I. e., the fresh, vigorous warriors who, like sparkling dewdrops upon the vegetation, gleam in the morning light.

^h ¹¹⁰⁴ Melchizedek may be a later addition. At any rate the reference is to the late Jewish story in Gen. 14¹⁸⁻²¹.

ⁱ ¹¹⁰⁵ So Aquila, Sym., and Jerome.

^j ¹¹⁰⁵ So Gk. Heb., chief, or head.

^k110⁷ An exceedingly difficult vs. Heb. reads, He drinks of the brook on the way; therefore he lifts up his head. The above translation follows a reconstruction suggested by Briggs (Pss., II, 379).

§ 41 Like Ps. 89, this ps. is based on the covenant with David recorded in II Sam. 7¹¹⁻¹⁶. The psalmist is, however, familiar with the writings of the Chronicler, II Chr. 6⁴⁰⁻⁴², and with a late Jewish tradition regarding the removal of the ark to Jerusalem in the days of David. He also uses the terms and is imbued with the ideas of the late priestly school. Cf. ⁹, ¹². The pious ones mentioned in ⁹, ¹⁶ are probably the Hasideans who rallied about Judas Maccabeus. The literary style of the ps. is awkward and repetitious and lacks the vigor of the earlier periods. It probably comes from the Maccabean period and voices the hope that Jehovah will redeem his promises to Jerusalem and the house of David through the achievements of the Hasmonean rulers. The lamp for Jehovah's anointed (David), ¹⁷, was probably Simon, who revived the traditions and glories of the Davidic dynasty. It is significant that in the closing stanza the psalmist puts the chief emphasis on the restoration of Jerusalem.

¹132¹ The reference is probably to the misfortunes attendant upon David's first attempt to remove the ark to Jerusalem. Cf. II Sam. 6¹⁻¹¹.

^m132³ No such oath is recorded elsewhere in the O.T. It is either an inference from the historical situation or an element taken from later Jewish tradition.

ⁿ132⁴ Cf. for the same idiom, Pr. 6⁴.

^o132⁵ The Heb. plural probably emphasizes the size and dignity of the dwelling place in which Jehovah's ark was to abide.

^p132⁶ Ephrathah, in Ruth 4¹¹ and Mic. 5², is the designation of the region about Bethlehem. From this context it appears that it included the region southwest of Jerusalem in which Kirjath-jearim, where the ark has been left, according to I Sam. 7¹, was situated.

^q132⁷ The historical narrative is here condensed. This vs. describes the resolve of the people.

^r132⁸ An echo of the ancient song that, according to Nu. 10³⁵, was sung in the wilderness whenever the people took up the ark and began the march. It is probably quoted from II Chr. 6⁴¹.

^s132⁹ So II Chr. 6⁴¹ and repeated in ¹⁶.

^t132¹⁰ Possibly this vs. is simply an addition from II Chr. 6⁴².

^a 132¹⁷ This figure is derived from Ezek. 29²¹.

^v 132¹⁷ Cf. I Kgs. 15⁴, where Rehoboam is described as the lamp of David.

§ 42 This ps. is an important historical document. In I Mac. 14¹⁴ it is recorded of Simon, the Maccabean ruler, that

*He strengthened all the distressed of his people,
He was full of zeal for the law,
And every lawless and wicked person he banished.*

There is every reason to believe that this ps. voices the ideals of Simon, who out of gratitude was made by his Jewish subjects their governor, military commander, and high priest. Of all the Maccabean rulers he was the most famous for the justice and faith which he showed to his nation, and because he sought by all means to exalt his people . . . so that the heathen were taken away from their country, as well as those who were in the city of David (I Mac. 14³⁵⁻³⁸). It expresses well the spirit that actuated the early Maccabean rulers. The reference in ³ to, lit., the work of them that turn aside is clearly an allusion to the apostate Jews whose leanings toward Hellenism had precipitated the Maccabean struggle. The reference in the second line of ⁵ is probably to the Sadducean nobles with which the Maccabeans as yet had made no alliances. The ps. gives an exceedingly vivid picture not only of the noble motives which actuated Simon but also of the difficult conditions with which he had to deal. Its five-beat metre emphasizes the deep feeling which inspired him.

^a 101¹ The Heb. adds, echoing the main verb, I would sing praises; but this destroys the metre and is apparently the work of a later scribe. Duhm and other commentators would reconstruct the original verb so as to read, I will keep mercy and justice. While this reconstruction is possibly original, it is only a conjecture.

^b 101² Lit., in the way of uprightness. Cf. ^c, in an upright way.

^c 101³ Certain scholars would reconstruct the Heb. so that this vs. would read, I will give heed to the way of the upright when he comes before me. While it is probable that the latter part of this line is corrupt, this reconstruction is not in harmony with its context. The first stanza of the ps. deals with the ruler's personal motives and actions. It is not until the second stanza that he describes his treatment of the wicked and the upright.

^d 101³ This verb and those throughout the ps. may be translated in the present, describing habitual action, but interpreted in the future tense they bring out more clearly the idea of the vow which underlies the ps. It corresponds in many ways to our modern oath of office.

^e 101³ Lit., thing of belial.

^f 101³ Or, the work of those who turn aside.

^g 101⁴ Lit., a perverse mind. Either a reference to the current tendency toward Hellenism or to falsehood in general.

^h101⁸ Lit., to mornings. The Heb. idiom, to rise early in the morning, was equivalent to our Eng. verb, to be zealous. The present idiom expresses the idea of being constantly zealous.

The Rule of Jehovah the Divine King.—A phase of the messianic hope very different from that expressed in the preceding sections is developed in the present group of ps. The Davidic king has disappeared completely from the psalmist's vision and instead Jehovah is the divine King, who rules supreme not only over little Israel but over all nations and the universe. These ps. represent in many ways the noblest and most spiritual expression of Israel's messianic hope. In the light of the prophetic writings, it is possible to trace the gradual unfolding of this belief. Like the Davidic national hopes, its genesis may be traced back to the days of the united Heb. kingdom. The example of one king ruling over all the tribes of Israel and their conquered neighbors suggested the analogy of one divine King ruling supreme over Jew and Gentile alike. The prophet Amos was the first to express the definite conviction that Jehovah directed the fortunes of Israel's heathen neighbors as well as those of his chosen people. Acquaintance with the Assyr., Baby., and Persian empires, each ruled by one absolute monarch whose authority extended almost to the bounds of the known world, tended powerfully to broaden Israel's conception of the extent of Jehovah's rule. The exile also brought them into touch with many foreign peoples and developed within the hearts of certain enlightened Jews the desire to share with other peoples the worship of the one God who had specially revealed himself to the Jewish people.

Zechariah, whose date, early in the Persian period, can be absolutely fixed, is the first prophet to express definitely this missionary hope: In those days ten men out of all the languages of the nations shall take hold of the skirt of him who is a Jew, saying: 'We will go with you, for we have heard that God is with you.' In Is. 56⁷ the noble hope is also expressed that Jehovah's house shall be called the house of prayer for all people. The unknown prophet of Zech. 14⁹, who wrote during the latter part of the Gk. period or during the Maccabean age, also clearly declared, Jehovah shall be king all over the earth.

In these ps., which describe Jehovah's kingly rule, the liturgical element is prominent. The authors of most of them were well acquainted with the later O.T. writings: Ezek., II Is., Gen., Job, and many of the earlier ps. The influence of II Isaiah is especially strong. These ps. represent the high-water mark of Israel's messianic hopes. Their ideals are broader, less national, and more universal than those found elsewhere in the Psalter. They probably reflect the larger outlook of the Jews of the dispersion, and may well have been written to be sung by the pilgrims as they came streaming from the distant lands of the exiles to pay homage to the divine King at the great annual feast in the days following the restoration of the Judean community as a result of Nehemiah's work. They formulate that exalted belief in the rule or kingdom of God which was given the central place in the teachings of Jesus. Spiritualized, ethicized, individualized, and yet universalized by him, this conception of Jehovah's rule became the corner-stone of Christianity.

§ 43 Many interpreters find in this ps. two or three distinct units. Vss. ¹, ² describe Jehovah's universal rule; vss. ³⁻⁶ those eligible to worship in Jehovah's temple; vss. ⁷⁻¹⁰ the entrance of ^a24³ The for is lacking in the Gk., Sym., and Theod., and may be a later addition.

Jehovah into his temple. There is unquestionably a certain literary unity in the ps., whether it be original or the work of the editor, for throughout Jehovah is the object of homage, and the theme is the going up of the people to the temple to worship. The date of the concluding section, ⁷⁻¹⁰, is the crux of the whole question. Its background is evidently an important event in the history of the temple. Three such events have been advocated by different interpreters: (1) the dedication of Solomon's temple; (2) the rededication of the second temple in 516; and (3) the reconsecration of the temple in 165 B.C. The martial note favors either the earliest or the latest date, but the position of the ps. in the Psalter does not favor the Maccabean period although it does not entirely preclude it. The reference to the everlasting doors, lit., doors of eternity, is inconsistent with the original dedication of the temple, if the allusion is to the gates of the temple itself. That the author or at least the editor of the ps. in its present form had in mind the temple gates is clearly shown by the first part of the ps., e. g., ⁴. Furthermore, there is no suggestion in the ps. that the author had in mind the gates of Jerusalem. The peculiar phrase, King of Glory, recalls the similar titles which the Baby. kings employed in their public decrees and historical inscriptions. Jehovah's entrance into his temple implies that, according to the belief of his worshippers, he had for a time abandoned it. From Ezek. and elsewhere in the contemporary literature we learn that this was precisely what was popularly believed by the Jews during the period of the Baby. exile. Ezekiel taught that Jehovah had temporarily taken up his abode on a distant mountain in the north. The problem that disturbed the temple builders to whom Zechariah spoke was whether or not Jehovah would be satisfied with the temple and its service, polluted as they had been by the presence of the heathen. Cf. Zech. 3¹⁻⁴. The second half of this ps., therefore, is peculiarly appropriate in connection with the rededication of the second temple. It implies that the people marched in solemn procession to the temple very much as they did at the dedication of the walls a few years later. Cf. Neh. 12³¹⁻⁴⁰. Equally appropriate is the opening stanza of Ps. 24, which describes the universality of Jehovah's rule—an idea which appears in germinal form in Am. 9 and was characteristic of the prophets of the earlier part of the Persian period. The qualifications of a true worshipper of Jehovah are also defined in the next stanza in accordance with the principles laid down by the pre-exilic prophets, rather than in accordance with primitive Heb. thought or even of that of later Judaism. Each element, therefore, in the ps. was eminently appropriate in connection with the dedication of the second temple in 516 B.C., and this dating accords well with its position in the Psalter. Its simple, vigorous style and its exultant spirit support this conclusion. The ps. was probably written to be recited by the people and the priests as the procession stood before the temple.

^c24⁴ Lit., who hath not lifted up himself to falsehood. A scribe has added the explanatory clause, hath not sworn to lie. His meaning evidently is that the worshipper had not borne false testimony against his neighbor. According to Heb. standards the vs. represents a rising climax: His hands were guiltless, his heart was pure, and he had done no wrong against his neighbor.

^d24⁵ I. e., that moral righteousness which qualifies one for admission to the sanctuary.

^e24⁶ I. e., the type of man who was worthy to enter the presence of the divine King.

Jehovah's

Ps. 93 ¹Jehovah reigneth,
Clothed in majesty as with a garment,
Jehovah hath girded himself with strength.

§ 44 This ps. is related both to 24 and the group of kingly ps. in 93-100. The warlike spirit in ⁵ possibly points to the Maccabean era, but it is the triumph of an omnipotent God, not of a warrior, which is here proclaimed. The ps. was evidently written to be used in connection with a feast, possibly that of trumpets, as is suggested by ⁵. Its background is a period of confidence and rejoicing and exaltation. The peaceful days following the rebuilding of the walls of Jerusalem by Nehemiah furnish a natural background. Its spirit is also that of II Isaiah.

²47² According to Philo Byblius, the Phœnicians used Eliom as a name for God. Aside from Nu. 24¹⁶, where it is employed by Balaam, its use as a designation of Jehovah is confined to the post-exilic writings.

³47³ Lit., spoke.

⁴47⁴ Heb., God, and so throughout the rest of the ps.

⁵47⁵ Possibly this line is secondary, as it is only a variant of the first line of ⁵.

⁶47⁶ Supplying the preposition with from the Gk. and Syr. It is evidently omitted by a scribe because it has in Heb. the same radicals as the following word for people.

⁷47⁷ I. e., the kings of the earth. Cf. Ps. 89¹⁸, where Jehovah is spoken of as the shield of his people.

§ 45 This majestic ps. has many points of contact with II Isaiah. Cf. ¹ and Is. 51⁹, 52¹; ² and Is. 44⁷, 45²¹, 46³. ³, ⁴, ⁵, ¹⁰. It is closely connected with 97 and 99 by the initial phrase, Jehovah reigneth. The psalmist clearly had in mind the vision of Jehovah, the divine King, seated on his throne, that made a profound impression upon the young Isaiah (Is. 6). Instead of the seraphim, the primeval floods here bear testimony to Jehovah's might and majesty. The first four vs. constitute a complete unit. While the poem may be very old, it was probably suggested by contemplation of the picture of creation in Gen. 1. Its thought and symbolism are akin to the powerful poems which come from the middle and latter part of the Persian period. The last vs., which focuses the attention on Israel's law and ceremonial institutions, is in contrast to the broad universalism of the rest of the ps. In its present structure the ps. is closely parallel to Ps. 19, where a fervent poem in praise of the law is appended to a nature ps. It reveals the spirit and convictions of the later Jews, who regarded natural phenomena and the law as kindred and the highest revelations of Jehovah's character and will. This conviction had taken possession of the Jews during the closing years of the Persian period, so that it is not impossible that the ps. in its present form comes from the same author, although it is probable that the last vs. was added by a later editor to adapt it to a liturgical use in connection with the temple.

^m93¹ So the VSS. Cf. 75³, I (Jehovah) hold up the pillars (of the earth). Heb., The world is established.

§ 46 This ps., like the others in the group to which it belongs, comes either from the latter part of the Persian or from the Gk. period. Vss. ⁷o-¹¹ are regarded by many as secondary, but they complete the logical unity of the ps. and it is more probable that they are from the original author than the work of a later editor. They illustrate the concreteness which distinguishes the Oriental from the Occidental poet.

§ 47 Pss. 96 and 98 are introduced by the same striking formula and are closely related in spirit and theme. It is possible that they were originally one ps., for 98 develops the thought of 96. The fact that Ps. 96 is quoted in I Chr. 16²⁸⁻³³ suggests, although it does not conclusively prove, that it comes from the Gk. period.

^a96^s I. e., are nothing and do nothing for their worshippers. The idea is a familiar one in the post-exilic writers. Cf. Lev. 19⁴, 26¹, and Ps. 97⁷.

^t96¹⁰ The parallel text in I Chr. 16³⁰ here departs widely from the order. Vs. 10^b is lacking and 10^a follows 11^a. Vs. 10^b is also but a repetition of 93¹⁰, The world also is established immovable. ^{v9612} So the parallel in I Chr. 16²³, and this forms the logical conclusion to the ps. A scribe has by mistake repeated the for he cometh and added, from 98⁹, He will judge the world in righteousness and the peoples in faithfulness.

^c99⁴ Possibly the abrupt change to the second person in this couplet is due to a scribe.

^d99⁴ Heb. adds in Jacob.

^e99⁴ So certain Heb. MSS. and Gk., supported by the analogy in ⁹. Traditional Heb. omits for.

§ 50 This ps. is connected with 93 and 99 by the same impressive introductory formula: Jehovah reigneth. Each of these pss. presents a vivid, majestic picture of Jehovah enthroned on high, ruling the universe in accordance with the principles of justice and righteousness. Few pss. in the Psalter express more nobly the spirit of worship. Nowhere in human literature is theology taught more impressively and effectively.

^f97² Heb. adds and justice.

^g97² Correcting the Heb. text, which reads, burneth up his adversaries.

^h97⁴ Lit., was in anguish or writhed round about. But this distinctive note is foreign to the ps.

ⁱ97⁵ As the result of dittography or for purpose of explanation, the Heb. adds at the presence of Jehovah.

^j97⁶ Into this highly poetic ps. a later scribe has inserted the exhortation: Let all of them be put to shame who serve graven images, who boast of idols. Worship him, all ye gods.

JEHOVAH'S CARE FOR HIS PEOPLE

⁹For thou^k art most high above all the earth,
Thou art exalted far above all gods.

¹⁰Jehovah loveth^l those who hate evil,
He preserveth the lives of his saints,
He delivereth them out of the hand of the wicked.

And all the families of the nations will worship in his presence;
²⁸For the dominion belongeth to Jehovah and he ruleth over the nations.
²⁹Verily, him alone will all the prosperous of the earth^m worship, ^k97⁹ Heb. adds Jehovah.

^l97¹⁰ So the VSS. The Heb. is clearly due to a verbal error.

§ 51 This brief ps. was evidently added to the ps. which preceded it, 22¹⁻²⁶, to adapt it to liturgical uses. The connection with the preceding, however, is very loose. The metre is the five-beat rather than the three-beat measure. The theme and spirit are also fundamentally different. Here Israel's missionary hope is clearly expressed. All nations, both the weak and the strong, are soon to come and worship Jehovah.

It is difficult to fix definitely the date of this ps. Its liturgical character, its relation to the preceding ps., which is in itself late, and the wide hope here expressed, all suggest that it is one of the latest ps. in the Psalter. The later Gk. or Maccabean period furnishes the most natural historical background.

^m22²⁹ Dividing the Heb. letters as the context requires. The ordinary translation, they have eaten, makes little sense.

ⁿ22³⁰ I. e., those who are on the verge of starvation and death, in contrast to the fat ones of the earth, in the parallel line. A scribe has added, in order to explain this unusual phrase, the words, even he who doth not keep himself alive.

^o22³⁰ Slightly correcting the Heb. text in accordance with the Gk. and Syr.

^p22³¹ Again following the Gk., supported by the Syr., and joining the first word of ³¹ to ³⁰.

Psalms of Thanksgiving.—The distinction between the ps. of praise and thanksgiving and those of adoration and trust is not always clearly drawn. Although they are closely related, there is, however, a fundamental difference. The ps. of adoration voice the feelings of the psalmists as they contemplated the gracious character of Jehovah, revealed in the life of the nation, in nature, and in his care for mankind; while the ps. of praise and thanksgiving express the gratitude which the individual or nation felt for definite services performed by Jehovah in their behalf. In the ps. of praise and thanksgiving some national deliverance or signal experience is usually in the mind of the psalmist, or else they were written for liturgical use. As a rule, therefore, these ps. are more national and less individualistic than the ps. of adoration.

The Hebrews conceived of thanksgiving as a form of offering pleasing to Jehovah. It is often compared with sacrifice and other concrete forms of expressing allegiance to their divine King. The pleasure which Jehovah was thought to take in praise is suggested by Ps. 30⁵:

*What profit is there in my blood when I go down to the pit?
Can the dust praise thee, and make known thy faithfulness?*

No one can question that there is an ultimate truth in this naive, primitive conception. The infinite God does not depend for his joy upon the gratitude of mankind; but, from all analogies between the human and divine Father, there is reason to believe that he delights in the sincere thanks of his children and, above all, in that development in their character which comes from the spontaneous and joyous expression of the innate and yet divine impulse of gratitude.

§ 52 This ps. bears the title, For the chief musician. To be sung by male soprano voices (following a revised text). Psalm of David. Originally Pss. 9 and 10 constituted one alphabetical ps. Ps. 10 has no superscription in the Heb., and the two ps. are joined in Gk. texts. They were evidently divided for liturgical purposes. Only half the alphabetical strophes can now be clearly distinguished. The metre also frequently changes from the three to the four-beat measure, indicating that the original poem has been recast, especially in vss. 7-10, 10¹⁻¹¹, by a later editor. Many attempts have been made to recover the original acrostic ps., but the resulting text is only conjectural. The logical connection of thought does not always follow the alphabetical strophic division, so that in the above analysis the acrostic structure has been ignored.

The artificial structure of the ps. points to a post-exilic date. The wicked in the community are arrogantly persecuting the afflicted righteous, 10³, and are uttering their sceptical taunts, as in the book of Mal. 3¹²⁻¹⁵. Cf. 10⁴⁻⁶. Jehovah is enthroned in his temple in Mount Zion. Evidently the background of this ps., like most of those in the first Davidic collection, is the discouraging days just before the appearance of Nehemiah.

^a9³ The allusion is evidently to some definite event.

^b⁹ Heb., the foe, a collective noun representing all of Israel's foes and especially the early Canaanites.

^c⁹ So Gk., Syr., and several MSS. Heb., ruins. The above translation is also strongly supported by this parallelism.

^d⁹ Heb., they, but a slight change gives the above.

^e⁹ Lit., high, inaccessible place.

^f¹⁰ Name in Heb. stands for the true self, the real character.

^g¹⁰ Possibly Jehovah is a scribal addition.

^h¹² Or, poor.

ⁱ¹³ The Heb. adds from those who hate me; but this fits very awkwardly in its context and appears to be a later explanatory gloss.

^j¹⁴ The Heb. has here the title of the ps. Possibly the poet has in mind the ps. in use in his day.

^k¹⁴ Lit., daughter of Zion.

^l¹⁵ Following Duhm (Psalmen, p. 30), in slightly correcting the text, as required by the context. Cf. ^m. The Heb. has the more common word heathen. Possibly this is due to a Maccabean scribe.

ⁿ¹⁶ The Heb. inserts at the end of this line, higgaion selah.

^o¹⁷ Making the same slight correction in the Heb. as in ^m, so that it reads proud instead of heathen. Here again the context supports the correction.

§ 53 The brief fifty-seventh ps. contains two independent poems on absolutely distinct themes, which reflect widely different situations. Ps. 57⁷⁻¹¹ is repeated in 108¹⁻⁴, indicating that it was once an independent unit. The refrain in ¹¹ is repeated in ⁵ and probably originally stood both at the beginning and end of the second poem. In this respect the ps. resembles 8, which has the same refrain at the beginning and end. The broad outlook, the happy, trustful spirit, and an atmosphere like that of the II Is. indicate that this brief poem was probably written during the latter part of the Persian period, when the Jewish community experienced the results of Nehemiah's reforms.

^p 57^s Heb., God, which probably stands for an original Jehovah, which has been restored.

^q 57^s So one Heb. MS. and Syr., supported by the parallelism. Heb., my glory; but the parallel 108² has a variant reading indicating that the text is corrupt.

^r 59^s So the parallel, 108². The Heb. of ⁹ has Lord.

^s 57^s The parallel 108² adds and.

^t 57¹⁰ An echo of 36^s.

§ 54 This is one of the more difficult and obscure ps. of the Psalter. It abounds in vigorous figures drawn from the earlier prophets. For the cup of judgment in the hands of Jehovah, cf. Jer. 25¹⁵, 49¹², Lam. 4²¹, Ezek. 23^{33, 34}, and Is. 51¹⁷. Arrogant, malicious foes rise prominently on the psalmist's horizon. The wicked are lifting up their horns, that is, attacking the people of Jehovah. Possibly the ps. comes from the period just before Nehemiah, but its apocalyptic style and the hope expressed in the concluding line, that the horns of the righteous will be lifted up, point to the earlier years of the Maccabean struggle.

^u 75¹ Restoring the Heb. with the aid of the Gk. and Syr.

^v 75² An oracle of Jehovah is here abruptly introduced. The Heb. verb means, lit., set. How long the persecuted Jews must suffer until the appointed time should arrive when Jehovah would overthrow their foes is the burning question in the closing chapters of the book of Daniel, which comes from the same period.

^w 75² Lit., seize an appointed time.

^x 75⁴ The horn was the symbol of power exerted. In Zech.'s vision, 1¹⁰⁻¹¹, the horns of the nations represented that with which they attacked the Jews.

^y 75⁵ Or, slightly revising the Heb., speaking not arrogantly against thy Rock. Gk., against God.

^z 75⁶ Slightly revising the Heb., which is unintelligible. The broken context implies that some such word as deliverance is implied, but the omission is even more impressive.

^a 75⁸ Following the Gk., which reads, lit., from this one to that one.

^b 75⁸ Heb. adds drink; but this is probably a note appended by a scribe to explain the preceding verb.

^c 75⁹ So Gk. Heb., I will declare.

^d 75¹⁰ Revising the Heb. text, which reads, and all the horns of the wicked.

^e 75¹⁰ The context requires a passive verb, but the Heb. reads, I will cut off.

§ 55 This Hallel ps. was sung, together with 114-118, at the feasts of Dedication and New Moon. It echoes the thought of Mal. and II Is. and has points of contact with the songs sung by the Jewish community during the latter part of the Persian period. Vs. 7 is quoted from I Sam. 2⁸ and may possibly be secondary. Vs. 9 is an echo of Is. 54¹. Like the other Hallel ps., this probably comes in its complete form from the Gk. period.

^f 113¹ So. Gk., Aquila, Sym., Theod., and Lat. Heb., servants of Jehovah. The reference is evidently to Jehovah's faithful worshippers.

^g 113¹ So certain Gk. MSS. supported by the metre. Heb., name of Jehovah.

^h 113⁵ Lit., he who exalteth himself to sit enthroned.

ⁱ 113⁶ Supplying the word things, implied by the context.

^j 113⁷ So the parallel in I Sam. 2⁸.

He is my rock, and there is no unrighteousness in him.

His

^k 113⁹ The Heb. text adds praise Jehovah, but this is evidently the superscription of the next ps., which otherwise is lacking.

§ 56 This ps. was written by one of the regular worshippers at the Jerusalem temple. It voices the experience of the Judean community. Cf., e. g., ¹¹. Hostile foes are about, but faith in Jehovah gives peace. The distinctive wisdom teaching in the second stanza recalls the thought of Pr. and indicates that the ps. was probably written during the latter part of the Gk. period. Its superscription, To the Musical Director, indicates that it was used and probably originally written to be sung in the temple service.

^{192^a} So Syr. Targ. and several Heb. texts, works. Heb., deed.

^m 92^a So Gk.B and three Heb. MSS. Heb. repeats for behold thy enemies, O Jehovah, but this is probably due to a scribal gloss.

^a 92¹⁰ So Syr. Heb., I am anointed.

^o 92¹¹ The text has been expanded, probably through a scribal error.

THANKSGIVING FOR JEHOVAH'S JUST RULE

§ 57. Jehovah's Power and Readiness to Deliver, Ps. 107

Jehovah's redemption of his people

Ps. 107 ¹O give thanks to Jehovah, for he is good,
For his lovingkindness endureth forever.
²Let the redeemed of Jehovah say so,
Whom he hath redeemed from the hand of the adversary,
³And gathered together out of the lands,
From the east and the west, from the north and the south.^p

From perils of the desert

⁴Straying^a in the wilderness, in the desert,^r
They found no way to an inhabited city.
⁵Hungry, yea, and thirsty,
Their soul was fainting within them.
⁶Then they cried to Jehovah in their trouble,
That he might deliver them out of their distresses.
⁷Then he made them walk a straight way,
That they might go to an inhabited city.
⁸Let them give thanks to Jehovah for his lovingkindness,
And his wonderful works for the children of men!
⁹For he satisfieth the longing soul,
And the hungry soul he filleth with good.

From imprisonment

¹⁰Dwelling in darkness and in gloom,
Being bound in affliction and iron,
¹¹Because they rebelled against the words of God,
And despised the counsel of the Most High,
¹²He brought down their heart with labor,
They stumbled, and there was no one to help them.

§ 57 This ps. contains a strong liturgical element and is characterized by a strophic as well as vs. rhythm. A marked peculiarity is that the refrain:

*Let them give thanks to Jehovah for his lovingkindness,
And for his wonderful works to the children of men,* which recurs in ⁸, ¹⁵, ²¹, ³¹, does not appear at the end of the strophe, but is in each case followed by a concluding couplet. The same syntactical construction is found in each of the stanzas. The original ps. apparently ended with ³². Vss. ³³⁻⁴² contain general illustrations of Jehovah's goodness and justice. Part of these are drawn from Job and other poetic books. They show unmistakable influence of the wisdom school and are didactic in their purpose. They preserve the metrical structure followed in the rest of the ps. and constitute a fitting conclusion. The epilogue in ⁴³ is modelled after the similar epilogue in Hos. 14¹⁰ and is intended as an index hand to call attention to the fundamental teachings embodied in the ps. The original ps. was inspired by the contemplation of II Is. and by the experiences of the generation to which the psalmist belonged. The horizon is not limited to Palestine but includes the distant lands of the dispersion. In imagination the reader beholds caravans making long journeys through the parched, trackless desert far away from inhabited cities. He shares their joy as at last they are guided to the populous, well-watered city, which is the goal of their pilgrimage. He sees captives dragged into distant exile living the life of slaves, in bonds, and afflicted by the lash of the taskmaster. Again the vision changes and he shares the trials and the perils of the sailors helplessly tossed by the storm. If not written in one of the lands of the dispersion this ps. is certainly from one who had travelled widely and observed closely and himself participated in the life that lay beyond the bounds of Palestine. There is no suggestion of the stress and struggle of the Maccabean period. The ps. comes rather from the Gk. period, when the life and thought of the Jews of the dispersion were even more important than those of Palestinian Judaism.

^p107³ This vs. is unmetrical and loosely connected with the context. It may be a later scribal note. The parallelism demands the change from Heb., west to south, at the end of the vs.

^a107⁴ So in ¹⁰, ¹⁷, ²². Heb., they strayed.

^r107⁴ So Gk. and Syr. and the implications of the context.

JEHOVAH'S READINESS TO DELIVER

¹³Then they cried to Jehovah in their trouble,
That he might save them out of their distresses.
¹⁴He brought them out of darkness and gloom,
And broke their bonds in sunder.
¹⁵Let them give thanks to Jehovah for his lovingkindness,
And for his wonderful works for the children of men!
¹⁶For he hath broken the gates of brass,
And hewed bars of iron in sunder.

¹⁷Fools because of their transgression,
And because of their iniquities are afflicted.
¹⁸Their appetite abhorreth all food,
And they draw near to the gates of death.
¹⁹Then they cry to Jehovah in their trouble,
That he may save them out of their distresses.
²⁰He sendeth his word, and healeth them,
And delivereth their life from destruction.^a ²¹Let them give thanks to Jehovah for his lovingkindness,
And for his wonderful works for the children of men!
²²And let them offer the sacrifices of thanksgiving,
And recount his works with singing.

²³Those who go to the sea in ships,
Who do business in great waters;
²⁴These see the works of Jehovah,
And his wonders performed in the deep.
²⁵For he commandeth, and raiseth the wind,^b
And the tempest lifteth up its waves.
²⁶They mount heavenward, they go down into the depths,
Their soul melteth because of trouble,
²⁷They reel and stagger like a drunken man,
And all their skill is exhausted.^c
²⁸Then they cry to Jehovah in their trouble,
That he may bring them out of their distresses.
²⁹He maketh the storm a calm,
So that the waves of the sea^v are still.
³⁰Then they are glad because they are quiet;
So he bringeth them to their desired haven.
³¹Let them give thanks to Jehovah for his kindness,
For his wonderful works to the children of men!
³²Let them exalt him in the assembly of the people,
And praise him in the session of the elders.

§ 58 This is an acrostic ps.: each succeeding vs. begins with a succeeding letter of the Heb. alphabet except that one, which the Gk. attempts to supply, has been lost. It is the most original of the nine acrostic ps. of the Psalter. At the same time it draws freely from the older ps. and prophetic books. Its universalism and didactic purpose connect it with similar writings of the Gk. period. The thought in ¹³ which reappears in Dan. 4³. ²⁴ seems to be native to the ps. In any case both of these writings probably come from the middle of the Gk. period.

§ 59 This is an orphan ps. Only in the Gk. does it have the superscription, To David, which characterizes the earlier collection of hymns. The contents of this ps. confirm the implication of the lacking superscription that it is a late insertion into the early Davidic Psalter. Vs. 7 echoes Job. 38²², vs. 9, Gen. 1³, 1⁵, Zech. 12¹. Vs. 10 finds its best historical illustration in I Mac. 3¹⁹. Vss. 11, 17, 19-21 also point to a Maccabean background. Signal victories over well-equipped foes are still fresh in the poet's mind. The consciousness of constant peril has left an indelible stamp upon the ps. Its logic, however, is clear and its faith unwavering. It was well calculated to appeal both to the reason and the feeling of the valiant but sorely beset Jews who rallied about Judas Maccabeus.

¹³³¹ This ps. apparently began with the last vs. of the preceding ps. The first line of 33 in the Heb., shout aloud ye righteous in Jehovah, is apparently due to a mistake of the scribe, who repeated elements from the two preceding lines.

^k 33² Cf. Is. 42¹⁰.

¹³³³ Possibly the original read, simply, his goodness. But cf. 11.

^m 33⁷ Heb., as a heap. Certain versions read, as a bottle. Possibly the original read, in a bottle. The reference here and in the following vss. is clearly to the account of the creation given in Gen. 1.

ⁿ 33¹⁰ Heb. adds Jehovah.

^o 33¹⁷ Following the Gk. and Targ.

^p 33²⁰ Lit., our life waits for Jehovah.

§ 60 The background of this ps. is either a great personal or national deliverance. Inasmuch as all the kings of the earth, ⁴, are impressed by it, the occasion would seem to be some great victory such as the overthrow of the Syrian armies by Judas and his followers. The consciousness of the need of Jehovah's continued protection against encircling foes, that is reflected so clearly in the last stanza, also points to the first half of the Maccabean era as the date of the ps.

^a 138¹ The VSS. insert Jehovah, which is lacking in the Heb.

^r 138² Faithfulness is probably a later insertion, for it destroys the regular metre and is not supported by the parallelism in ^s.

^s 138³ The meaning of this line is obscure. Heb., lit., For thou hast magnified thy word above all my name. The above consonant reading is suggested by Duhm (Psalmen, 285). Thy word is lacking in Gk.

^t 138⁴ Again following the superior Gk.

^u 138⁶. ^s Heb. adds Jehovah.

^v 138⁶ Or, following a revised text, he striketh down.

^w 138⁷ Probably Heb., wrath, is due to a scribal error.

§ 61 Briggs regards Pss. 105 and 106 as originally one ps., for in 106⁹ ^g he finds the immediate sequel to 105¹⁻⁷. To combine them, however, he is compelled to delete 105^{3, 4, 7} and 106¹⁻⁸. Both ps. deal with the same theme, but in 106 the sins of the forefathers are heightened, indicating that the two ps. are written from distinct points of view and with different aims. Ps. 105, like 78, develops the historic theme of Is. 51^{1, 2}. In both Israel's history is reviewed with a didactic aim, but here the liturgical motif is in the ascendancy. Vss. 1-15 are quoted in I Chr. 16⁸⁻²² and attributed, together with a long quotation from 96, to David and connected with the transfer of the ark to Jerusalem. Possibly the quotation was introduced into Chrs. by a later interpolator, but it is probable that the ps. was written during the first half of the Gk. period. The author

§ 63 This alphabetical poem is the first of the Hallel pss. The acrostic structure indicates that the opening words, Praise ye Jah, as in the case of the other Hallel pss., is a superscription rather than an integral part of the ps. The analysis is difficult because the necessity of beginning each alternating line with the succeeding letter of the Heb. alphabet made it impossible for the poet to express himself freely. Like many of the acrostic, liturgical pss., it consists of a series of pious ejaculations taken from earlier pss. or based on Israel's national experiences. Its position in the Psalter, its acrostic structure, its legal vocabulary, and its echo in 10 of one of the fundamental teachings of the sages indicate that it comes from the Gk. period, although ⁵. ⁶. ⁷ may point to the Maccabean era.

⁷ 111¹ This reference indicates that the psalmist belonged to the group of the pious, who were devoted to the worship of the temple and who emerge in later history as the Hasideans, the forerunners of the Pharisees.

THANKSGIVING FOR RECENT NATIONAL DELIVERANCES

Pss. 18, 66¹⁻¹², 68, 76, 124, 126, 118

§ 65. Jehovah's Protection and Deliverance of His Servant, Ps. 18

Jehovah a refuge
in the hour of mortal
need

Ps. 18 ²Jehovah^a is my rock and my fortress,
My deliverer,^b my stronghold in which I seek refuge;
My shield, and the horn of my salvation, my high tower,
My saviour, who delivereth me from violence.^c

§ 64 This little hymn of praise expresses feelings characteristic of the pss. of the Gk. period.

^a117² Heb., of Jehovah.

§ 65 This ps. opens with an elaborate superscription: For the musical director. To David, the servant of Jehovah, who spoke to Jehovah the words of this song in the day that Jehovah delivered him from the hand of his enemies and from the hand of Saul. And he said, I love thee, Jehovah, my strength. The ps. itself is written entirely in the first person singular; but a later hand, possibly the same that wrote the superscription, has added a postscript in the third person:

*Who giveth deliverance to his king,
And doeth kindness to his anointed,
To David and his seed forever.*

Possibly, under the influence of the interpretation suggested by this superscription and postscript the ps. was placed in the mouth of David and included in the appendix to II Sam. In its present position in II Sam 22 it separates the extracts from the older records of David's reign found in 21 and 24. The variations between the two versions of the ps. are many and significant. On the whole, the version in II Sam. 22 is the better preserved. Whether the ps. was placed in II Sam. as the result of the testimony of the superscription at the beginning of Ps. 18 or not is uncertain; but, like the other traditions of Davidic authorship appended to pss., it is evidently much later than the ps. itself, which contains no strong evidence in favor of and much against its Davidic authorship. While there is a certain ideal or messianic element running through the ps., there are many indications that it is not individual but national. The keynote of the ps. is struck in ²⁷: For thou dost save an afflicted people. The elaborate theophany described in ²⁸⁻³⁶ is natural if in behalf of a nation but not of an individual. The foes described are not individuals, but nations. Cf. especially ²⁹. ³⁷⁻⁴³. Throughout the ps. the allusions are to general not to specific events. It is a song of praise and adoration for Jehovah's signal deliverances of his people. It contains many echoes of II Is. and Dt. 32. The late priestly conception of righteousness is presented in ²⁰⁻²⁴.

^a18² The Heb. of this ps. has the introductory line, I love thee, Jehovah, my strength; but it is lacking in the parallel version of II Sam. 22, and has no corresponding line in the context.

^b18² So II Sam. 22². The Heb. adds my God, but it is in Ps. 18² probably the result of a scribal error in writing the original Heb. of to me.

^c18² II Sam. 22² adds my refuge, from violence thou savest me, but the transition to the direct address is not supported by the context although the line is probably original.

JEHOVAH'S PROTECTION OF HIS SERVANT

•Worthy to be praised is Jehovah, I proclaim,
Inasmuch as I am saved from mine enemies.

⁴The breakers^d of death encompassed me,
And the floods of impiety^e made me afraid.

⁵The cords of Sheol came around me,
The snares of death confronted me.

⁶In my distress I called upon Jehovah,
And cried for help to my God;
From his temple he heard my voice,
My cry for help came^f to his ears.

⁷The earth shook and quaked,
And the foundations of the heavens^g trembled.
They tottered because he was wroth.

⁸Smoke went up out of his nostrils,^h
And fire from his mouth devoured,
Coals flamed forth from him.

⁹Then he bowed the heavens and came down,
Thick darkness was under his feet;

¹⁰And he rode upon a cherub and flew,
Yea, he swooped down upon the wings of the wind.

¹¹Darkness he placedⁱ round about him,^j
His covering was the mass^k of the waters,
Thick clouds of the skies ¹²without brightness,^l
Before him his thick clouds passed,
Coals of fire burned.^m

¹³Then Jehovah thundered fromⁿ the heavens,

¹⁴He sent out his arrows and scattered them,^p
He shot forth^q his lightning and discomfited them.^r

His advent

deliver

The reflective, didactic note of the wisdom teachers appears in 25-27. The presence of certain Aramaic words also point to a comparatively late period. The deliverance in 4-6 may have been suggested by the work of Nehemiah in protecting the Judean community from its foes. The victorious, warlike note in 24-40 points to the early Maccabean period. The ps. may possibly come from the latter part of the Persian period, but on the whole it fits better in the days following the great victories of Judas, in 165 B.C. It was probably added to the first collection of Davidic ps., even after the early canon of the Psalter was complete, because it had already found a place in II Sam. and was by common consent attributed to David. While it contains many strong figures, it lacks the originality and spontaneity of the earlier and less elaborate ps.

THANKSGIVING FOR NATIONAL DELIVERANCES

⁴⁷The God, who giveth me vengeance,
And subdueth^p peoples under me,
⁴⁸Who delivereth me from all mine enemies,
Thou wilt lift me up above mine opponents,
Thou wilt deliver me from the man who is violent.^q
⁴⁹Therefore I will give thee thanks among the nations,
I will sing praises to thy name, O Jehovah.

§ 66. Jehovah's Might and Justice, Ps. 66¹⁻¹²

Ps. 66 ¹Shout to Jehovah, all the earth,
²Sing forth the glory of his name,
Make his praise glorious.
³Say,^r 'How terrible are thy works!
Through thy great might thine enemies come cringing to thee.
⁴All the earth boweth down before thee,
And they sing praises,^s they sing praises to thy name.'

⁵Come and see the works of Jehovah,
He is terrible in his dealing with men,
⁶He turned the sea into dry land,
They went through the stream on foot.
Verily, in him we rejoice,
⁷He who ruleth by his might forever,
His eyes keep watch over the nations;
Let not the rebellious exalt themselves.

⁸O bless our God, ye peoples,
And make the sound of his praise to be heard.
⁹He it is who setteth us in life,
And suffereth not our feet to be moved.
¹⁰For thou, O Jehovah, hast proved us,
Thou hast tried us as silver is tried.
¹¹Thou broughtest us into the net,
Thou didst lay a heavy burden upon our loins,
¹²Thou didst cause men to ride over our head,
We went through fire and through water,
¹³But thou broughtest us out to a broad place.^t

^p 18⁴⁷ So II Sam. 22⁴⁸ and the demands of the context.

^q 18⁴⁸ So II Sam. 22⁴⁹.

§ 66 Most recent interpreters recognize that Ps. 66 contains two originally independent hymns; the first, 1-12, is uttered in behalf of the community, while the second, 13-20, is individual. The first ps. was either written in the joyous days following the work of Nehemiah or, as is more probable, it is a Maccabean ps. written after the persecutions of Antiochus Epiphanes and after the Jews, led by Judas, had won their marvellous victories. Cf. especially 3. 4. 11. 12.

^r 66³ Heb. adds to God, but this is unnecessary and is probably a scribal explanatory note.

^s 66⁴ Possibly the same scribe has also added in this line an unnecessary to thee. It is probably a case of dittography from the last word of the preceding line.

^t 66¹³ So VSS. The Heb. is usually translated, into a wealthy place.

§ 67 Evidently the background of this ps. is a great victory. It was so signal and complete that it recalled the other great victory won by the Hebrews on the plain of Esdraelon under the leadership of Deborah and Barak. The poet constantly weaves into this ps. figures and lines derived from the ancient poem describing that event, Judg. 5. Now he has in mind the defeat not of the king Sisera but of the royal leaders of several armies who have been put to flight, leaving their rich, scattered spoil behind them, ¹²⁻¹⁴. The warlike, exultant spirit is clearly that of the Maccabean era. Cf. ²⁰⁻²². The many citations from older Heb. poems, and especially II Is., also point to a late date. The vivid picture of the processions of singers and musicians and the assembled people in ²⁴⁻²⁶ is a counterpart of the description of the reconsecration of the temple by Judas and his followers in 165 B.C., when they had won their marvellous victories over the Syrian armies. I Mac. 4^{44b-46} states that the temple was dedicated again with songs and harps and lutes and with cymbals. And all the people prostrated themselves and worshipped and gave praise to Heaven, who had given them good success. And they celebrated the dedication of the altar eight days and offered burnt offerings with gladness and sacrificed a sacrifice of deliverance and praise. This ps. has been assigned to almost every period from Joshua to John Hyrcanus, but in the momentous year of 165 B.C. it finds its only altogether satisfactory setting. It richly supplements our knowledge of that crisis, for it reveals the feelings of the victorious Jews. Like the contemporary visions of Dan. 7-12, its language is highly figurative and at times almost florid, but it is full of poetic fire. Cf. ¹²⁻¹⁵. The rebellious in ⁶⁻¹⁸ are probably the apostate Jews.

^u68¹ Or let Jehovah arise. The original rendering Jehovah has been restored throughout this Elohistic ps.

^v68² Supplying the implied antecedent wind. The present Heb. reads, thou drivest. But in this passage Jehovah is spoken of in the third person rather than in the second and the parallelism demands the above rendering.

^w68⁴ Slightly reconstructing the Heb. text as the context and the parallel in ²⁸ imply. Heb., in the barren places.

^x68⁴ Again reconstructing the Heb. as the context demands. The Heb. text, which reads, in Jah, his name, makes no sense and is evidently corrupt. This conclusion is confirmed by the variant Gk. reading. Another possible reconstruction is, In Jehovah rejoice and exult before him.

^y68⁶ I. e., restoreth the lonely, scattered exiles.

^z68⁶ Gk. and Syr., in graves. The Heb. text is doubtful.

^a68⁸. The figures in these vss. are derived from the song of Deborah, Judg. 5.

^b68⁸ One MS. omits this phrase and it may be secondary.

^o68¹⁰ Heb. adds Jehovah.

^d68¹² Gk., king, but this is probably due to the influence of the song of Deborah.

^e68¹² I. e., wives of the victorious warriors. The poet also had in mind Judg. 5²⁹, 30.

^f68¹² A scribe has introduced at the close of this line a quotation from Judg. 5¹⁶, Will ye lie down among the sheepfolds? It is clearly secondary. Possibly the rest of ¹² is also a later addition, for ¹⁴ continues the theme of ¹².

^g68¹² From the context and the parallel of the song of Deborah, it is evident that in this obscure passage the reference must be to the flight of the defeated Canaanites as they left their silver and gold behind them.

^h68¹⁴ The situation of Zalmon is unknown. It may have been one of the hills where a Maccabean victory was won, which was strewn with the bones of the slaughtered warriors.

ⁱ68¹⁵ Probably Bashan simply stands for an invincible mountain and higher by comparison than the temple mount of Jerusalem. Cf. the common figure of oaks of Bashan used as a symbol of strength.

^j68¹⁶ Dividing the Heb. letters as the context requires. The present Heb. text is practically meaningless.

^k68¹⁷ The text here is doubtful. Thousands upon thousands is a familiar type of scribal expansion.

^l68¹⁸ Following the Syr. Heb. has lost the negative and is clearly corrupt. Possibly this line is secondary.

^m68¹⁹ Heb., the God who.

ⁿ68²⁰ Omitting Lord with the Gk.

^o68²² The meaning of this line is obscure. In the light of the parallelism the thought apparently is that even from distant Bashan Jehovah will save his people. Cf. I Mac. 5 for Judas's expedition a few months later to save the Jews living in this region.

^s 68²⁵ This is one of the clearest descriptions which we have in the O.T. of a festival proception. It indicates that both sexes participated and that music was employed as well as song.
^t 68²⁶ The meaning of the Heb. is here very doubtful.
^u 68²⁷ These lines are clearly echoes of Judg. 5¹⁴⁻¹⁵.
^v 68²⁸ Following the Gk., Syr., Targ., and many other MSS. Heb., thy God commandeth

^w 68²⁹ The Heb. adds From thy temple upon Jerusalem, to thee the kings shall bring gifts. But this is either a conflation of two independent lines or else a scribal addition anticipating ³¹. ³².
^x 68³⁰ The reference is probably to the Egyptians, as in Is. 30¹⁻⁷.

¹¹Pay vows to Jehovah,^k your God,
To the terrible One let all round about him bring gifts.
¹²He taketh away¹ the spirit of princes,
He is terrible to the kings of the earth.

§ 68 Here we feel the warlike, exultant Maccabean spirit. The ps. was evidently written after a signal victory. It may well have been the defeat of the boastful Syrians under the three generals on the plain near Emmaus, recorded in I Mac. 41-47. The afflicted in ⁹ describes the persecuted Jews in the early stages of the Maccabean struggle. The text of this ps. has suffered greatly; but scribal errors have not wholly obscured its bold vigor and hopefulness.

^o76² A late designation of Jerusalem. Cf. Gen. 14¹⁸.

¹76⁴ This line is evidently corrupt, as the variant readings and the lack of consistency with the context indicate. The Heb. must be corrected with the aid of Targ., which reads, fearful for glorious. Cf. 7. 12, where the same title is used. Excellent, added in the Heb., is probably due to a scribe who was trying to make the meaning clear.

^a76⁴ Gk., everlasting mountains. This reading may be original but the Heb. is consistent with the picture of Jehovah as a lion defying and shattering the weapons of Israel's foes and leaping upon the sleeping hosts, even as Judas, descending from the mountains, attacked the unsuspecting Syrians in the early morning, I Mac. 41-47.

^b76⁵ I. e., had no time to make armed resistance before they were overpowered by the fierce warriors of Judas.

¹76⁷ Restoring the corrupt Heb. text.

¹76¹⁰ The meaning of this vs. is not clear. Wrath of men may mean wrath against men, i. e., the feeling of indignation which the Jews felt toward their foes. The traditional Heb. text of the second line makes little sense, shalt thou gird upon thee. A slight change gives the above.

^k76¹¹ Jehovah may be a scribal addition.

¹76¹² So Gk. and Lat. Heb., cut off, i. e., courage.

JEHOVAH'S MIGHTY DELIVERANCE

§ 69. Jehovah's Mighty Deliverance, Ps. 124

Ps. 124 ¹If it had not been Jehovah who was ours, let Israel now say, ²If it had not been Jehovah who was ours, when men rose up against us;
³Then they had swallowed us alive, when their wrath was kindled against us, ⁴Then the waters had overwhelmed us, the stream had gone over our souls.^m

Jehovah's deliverance in hours of peril

⁶Blessed be Jehovah, who hath not given us as a prey to their teeth.
⁷Our soul is escaped as a bird out of the snare of the fowlers;
The snare was broken, and we indeed have escaped alive.
⁸Our help is in the name of Jehovah, maker of heaven and earth.

Thanksgiving to Jehovah for escape

§ 70. Thanksgiving for a Return of Prosperity, Ps. 126

Ps. 126 ¹When Jehovah restoreth prosperity to Zion,
We are like those who have been dreaming.
²Then is our mouth filled with laughter,
And our tongue with singing;
Then they say among the nations:
'Jehovah hath done great things for them.'
³He^a hath done great things for us; we are glad.

Joy over return of prosperity

⁴Hasten our prosperity, O Jehovah,
As the streams in the South Country.^o
⁵May they who sow in tears reap in joy.
⁶Let him who goeth forth weeping,
Bearing the seed for sowing,
Come again with joy, bringing his sheaves.

Prayer for prosperity

§ 71. Jehovah's Unceasing Goodness, Ps. 118

Ps. 118 ¹Oh give thanks unto Jehovah, for he is good;
For his kindness endureth forever.

Call to all classes to praise Jehovah

§ 69 Here we have another vivid, practically contemporary picture of the strenuous Maccabean crisis, when for a time the Jews seemed, indeed, to be given up as prey to the teeth of their heathen foes.

^m 124⁴ A scribe has repeated the preceding line.

§ 70 In this ps. we hear the laughter and songs of the Jews, when the victories of Judas turned the tide of prosperity toward Zion and when all the heathen world recognized that their God had verily done great things for his people. The second stanza indicates that, as during the early years of the Maccabean era, the crisis had not entirely passed.

^a 126³ Heb. repeats Jehovah.

^o 126⁴ I. e., where the land is parched and in need of water.

§ 71 This is one of the most majestic of all the liturgical ps. Its unity has been questioned and many able commentators have been inclined to interpret the recurring refrains as evidence of alternating strophe and antistrophe in the mouth of a soloist and a chorus or two distinct choruses. That this is true of the processional that begins with ¹⁹ cannot be doubted. The literary structure of the first part, however, appears to be simpler. Vss. ¹⁻⁴ are a call to praise Jehovah. First the entire nation, then the priests, and last of all the assembled worshippers are exhorted to join in the hymn of praise and triumph which follows, ⁵⁻¹⁸. The spokesman in ¹⁻⁴ may be the high priest or more probably the director of the temple singers. Then the assembled people outside the temple gates join with the priests within in a song of national thanksgiving in which the nation, as in many other ps., speaks collectively. In the processional which begins attacking foes

- ¹⁰All nations encompassed me about;
 In the name of Jehovah I will circumcise^t them.
¹¹They encompassed me about; they encompassed me;
 In the name of Jehovah I will circumcise them.
¹²They encompassed me as bees do wax;^u
 In the name of Jehovah I will circumcise them.^v
¹³They who thrust at me thrust that I might fall;^w in ¹⁰ the worshippers outside the temple gates address the Levites or the priests, who reply in each succeeding couplet. The assembled worshippers speak collectively, as in the first part of the ps., while the priests or Levites address them in the plural. In conclusion, ²⁰, all join in the refrain.
 But Jehovah helped me.

This martial ps. is the later counterpart of the triumphal odes of which the so-called song of Deborah in Judg. 5 is a classic example. It possibly embodies passages drawn from older war-songs. Vss. ¹⁰⁻¹³ clearly reflect the warlike spirit of the Maccabean age. It abounds in vivid references to the details of the Maccabean struggle, e. g., All nations encompass me about. In their disastrous negotiations with such perfidious kings as Antiochus Epiphanes they had learned the lesson that it is better to take refuge in Jehovah than to put faith in princes, ⁹. Evidently the ps. was written after a signal victory. Cf. ⁵. This was in all probability Judas's victory over Nicanor, and this ps. may well have been written to be sung in celebrating Nicanor's day. According to I Mac. ^{7⁴², 46}, the people rejoiced greatly and kept that day as a day of great gladness. They also enacted an ordinance for the yearly celebration of this day, the thirteenth day of Adar. This ps. voices the spontaneous outburst that resulted from the relaxation of the tension of the early Maccabean struggle. It contains quotations from many earlier ps. The large liturgical element indicates that it is intended to be used in a public service. It is exceedingly probable, therefore, that it is written to be used in celebrating Nicanor's day. It is interesting to note that the first person singular is constantly used to express the collective thought of the community.

^{p 118²} So Gk. Heb. omits house of, as the metre requires.

^{q 118⁵} A condensed statement implying the verb set me. The figure is the antithesis of that suggested by the first member of the couplet, i. e., a narrow place. The line is an echo of 18,¹⁰ he brought me forth into a large place.

^{r 118⁶} The vs. is quoted from 56¹¹.

^{s 118⁷} An echo of 54⁷. The rest means, lit., look, i. e., gaze unabashed and triumphant.

^{t 118¹⁰} This is the literal meaning of the Heb. and corresponds to the usage of the Maccabean leaders. The Idumeans, for example, were judaized and circumcised by John Hyrcanus at the point of the sword. Otherwise the text must be revised to read, cause them to fall.

^{u 118¹²} So Gk. Heb., they are quenched as fire of thorns. This makes no sense and is evidently due to a scribal mistake and addition.

^{v 118¹²} This stirring vs. of the AV was chanted by the Protestant army at the battle of Coutras as they advanced to the fray.

^{w 118¹³} Heb., thou didst thrust me sore that I might fall, makes no sense. The Gk. suggests that the above reading represents the original text.

Levites:

^b 118²⁶ I. e., grant his favor as in the priestly blessing of Nu. 6²⁴.

^c 118²⁶ Vs. ²⁷ is evidently corrupt. Many reconstructions have been suggested. Possibly the verb is to be read, as in I Kgs. 20¹⁴, begin the dance with branches even to the altar, even to the horns of the altar. Wreath the festal march with branches of myrtle. From the analogy of the preceding stanzas we expect here a direct address to Jehovah, as in ²¹⁻²³. This is found in ²³. Whatever be the exact meaning of ^{27b}, it is evidently a prose liturgical direction that has probably crept into the text from the margin. The first part of ²⁷, thou art God and he giveth us light, is probably secondary, for it is loosely connected with its context.

Thy right hand is full of righteousness, ¹¹Mount Zion rejoiceth;
The daughters of Judah exult because of thine acts of judgment.

§ 72 This ps. was clearly written after the rebuilding of Jerusalem's walls under the leadership of Nehemiah. It may well voice the pride and exultation of the Jewish community after this work was completed.

^a48¹ Heb., great is Jehovah . . . in the city of our God. But Jehovah is evidently an addition later than the work of the editor of these ps., who systematically changed the name of Jehovah to Elohim (God). The present Heb. reading is also inconsistent with the context, with the metrical structure of the line, and with the general feeling of the ps. Probably the late scribe who added this word also added the preposition in before the city of Jehovah in order to make the line intelligible. Removing these later additions, the meaning of the ps. is clear.

^b48² I. e., the temple hill which slopes to the north.

^c48³ The usual reading is, the city of the great king. But the following line requires a verb to complete the thought and metre. Reading the last word of the preceding line thus solves the two or three distinct problems presented by the context.

^d48³ Restoring the original Jehovah which was changed by a later scribe to Elohim.

^e48⁷ Heb. in. But the above reading is supported by certain MSS. and the context.

^f48⁸ The text is evidently here corrupt. Heb. adds the repetitious phrase in the city of our God.

^g48⁸ The Heb. has the word selah. Possibly this represents a similar Heb. word meaning ever, so completing the metrical structure of the line with the expression forever and ever.

ⁱ48¹⁰ Slightly correcting the Heb. in accordance with certain MSS.

¹⁴⁸¹³ Again slightly revising the Heb. in accordance with the demands of the context and according to the MSS.

¹⁴⁸¹³ Lit., pass between. The exact meaning of the verb, however, is not certain.

¹⁴⁸¹⁴ The Heb. adds It is he who leadeth us to death, but the Gk. omits the verb, and the words translated unto death are probably a part of the musical direction which originally stood at the beginning of the following ps.

§ 73 The exile is in the background and the restored city and temple in the foreground of this ps. The point of view is evidently that of a pilgrim who has made a long and arduous journey to worship at the temple. Worship for him is not a duty but a transcendent privilege. His spirit is not crushed by the burdens imposed by the later Jewish law nor by the ceremonialism of the ritual. He loves the temple because it is the place where he may worship the living God for which his heart and flesh cry out. Pilgrimages from the lands of the dispersion do not appear to have been common until the latter part of the Persian and the early part of the Gk. period. This general date well satisfies the implications within the ps. Selah marks the end of the first stanza, ⁴. The five-beat measure expresses the deep emotion and exultation of the poet. Many scholars hold that the latter part of the ps. is supplemented by extracts from an originally independent ps., but the evidence is not convincing.

⁸⁴³ Any small bird.

⁸⁴⁴ Lit., still. Gk., forever and ever.

⁸⁴⁵ Gk., goings up, i. e., pilgrimages.

⁸⁴⁶ Probably the psalmist has in mind Hos. 2¹⁵, where the valley of Achor (trouble) becomes a door of hope through which the Hebrews in their early days passed from their painful experiences in the Wilderness to the possession of Canaan. Cf. deep, dark valley in Ps. 23³. The reference is to any cheerless, barren valley such as those which surround southern Palestine on almost every side.

⁸⁴⁶ So one Heb. MS. and Gk. Heb., they.

⁸⁴⁶ The comparison here is apparently with a field covered with springing vegetation as the result of an early spring rain.

⁸⁴⁷ Heb., they, but the preceding and following context indicates that the original read as above.

⁸⁴⁷ Possibly this means from one stronghold to another, or from wall to wall, referring to the pilgrim custom of encamping each night under the shadow of some city wall. It is possible and on the whole more probable, that it refers to the strength derived from Jehovah, to which reference is made in ⁵, although a different Heb. word is used.

⁸⁴⁸ Many commentators regard this vs. as a later gloss. Shield, however, here, as in ¹¹, probably refers to Jehovah. A departure from the Massoretic division of the text gives a better meaning and satisfies the demands of the metre. If ⁹ is original, as seems probable, thine anointed would either refer to the Jewish people or to the psalmist himself.

PRAISE AND THANKSGIVING FOR PERSONAL DELIVERANCES

Ps. 30, Jon. 2²⁻⁹, Pss. 66¹³⁻²⁰, 116

§ 75. Gratitude for Deliverance from Death, Ps. 30

From
peril

Ps. 30 ¹I exalt thee, O Jehovah, for thou hast drawn me forth,^a

And thou hast not permitted my foes to rejoice over me, O Jehovah.

²My God, I cried to thee for help and thou hast healed me;

^v84¹⁰ This rendering of the Heb. is supported by the Gk. and by the Lat. The current Eng. translation is be a doorkeeper.

^w84¹⁰ I. e., in the land of the heathen even though they offer large opportunity.

§ 74 Like Ps. 84, this ps. probably comes from the Gk. period. Its outlook includes the lands of the dispersion. The text is obscure and the exact meaning a little doubtful. The unifying thought is that wherever the scattered members of the Hebrew race may be found they glory in their common citizenship in Zion. Even in the mind of Jehovah, citizenship in Zion is regarded as a great distinction.

^x87¹ The abrupt opening, his foundation, suggests that the original read as above. This reading is also supported by the metre and parallelism of the vs.

^y87² I. e., all the other places where the Jews dwell.

^a87⁴ The symbolic name of Egypt, used in Is. 30⁷ and Ezek. 29³ to describe that land as a monster that swallows up the nations.

^a87⁶ A scribe has added with Ethiopia. The reference in this vs. is probably to the Jews dwelling in these lands and possibly also to the proselytes found there.

^b87⁵ So Gk. Heb. omits mother.

^c87⁷ Gk. and Lat., dwellings. The Heb., fountains, probably means all who have sprung from Zion.

§ 75 This ps. bears the superscription, A Psalm: Sung at the Dedication of the House of David. This title suggests that it was later used in connection with the feast of dedication of the temple in 165 B.C. The presence of such phrases as go down to the pit, ^a, ^b, and the familiarity of the

§ 76. Gratitude for Deliverance from Great Peril, Jon. 2³⁻⁹

Jon. 2 ¹I cried out of my distress to Jehovah, and he answered me;
Out of the midst of Sheol I cried aloud, and thou heardest my voice.
²For thou hadst cast me into the heart of the seas, and the flood rolled about me;

An

psalmist with such late passages as Is. 54¹, ² and Jer. 31¹², and the references to the great afflictions in ², ³ indicate that the ps. is post-exilic. The psalmist, however, still holds the primitive conception of the future life as a joyless, impersonal existence, ⁹. He is also unfamiliar with the teachings of the book of Job. The language of the ps., especially in ², ³, ⁶⁻¹⁰, is strongly individualistic. It is possible that it may have been later used by the community as a public hymn, but there is little doubt that its foundation is the poet's own personal experience. Its thought and its place in the Psalter indicate that it probably was written about the middle of the Persian period.

^b30² It is exceedingly probable that the following lines:

*Sing to Jehovah, O ye his saints;
And give thanks in commemoration of his holiness,* are secondary, for they anticipate the thought of ¹² and are in the three-beat rather than in the prevailing four-beat measure. Their language and thought are also alien to the context.

^c30³ Lit., for a moment in his anger, lives in his favor.

^d30⁴ This beautiful figure of sorrow coming into the heart to lodge overnight, as the shades of twilight gather, and of the relief and joy which come at sunrise is marvellously true to human experience.

^e30⁵ Possibly this line is secondary.

^f30⁷ This line is evidently corrupt. The above rendering is based upon a slight emendation of the text and is strongly supported by the context. The Heb. adds unto my Lord. Certain MSS. have Jehovah and the Gk., my God. It is probably a scribal addition, for it destroys the metrical and logical symmetry of the vs. Gk. translates the vs. in the past tense rather than as imperatives.

^g30¹² Here, as frequently in the ps., the Heb. word for liver, which was thought to be the seat of the emotions (Assyr., kabittu), has evidently been mistaken for the more common and very similar Heb. word meaning glory.

§ 76 This ps., inserted in the story of Jonah, but with no close connection with the context, was probably placed there by some later editor of the prophetic book because certain of its figures recalled the experiences of the Hebrew prophet. It is not entirely clear whether it was originally intended to express the experiences of the Jewish race or of the psalmist. The points of contact with Ps. 30 are many and close. Probably the author of Jon. 2 was familiar with the older ps. His figures, however, are more hyperbolic and varied. In any case they are not to be interpreted literalistically. As in Ps. 80, the poet probably has primarily in mind his own experiences as an exile in a foreign land. His zeal for the temple service is strong, cf. ⁴, ⁷⁻⁹, and indicates that he probably lived during the Greek period. For critical notes, cf. § 202^{k-q}, Vol. III.

ology

²⁰Bless Jehovah,
Who hath not turned away my prayer,
Nor his lovingkindness from me.

§ 77 This appendix to the national hymn found in the first part of the ps. was evidently intended to be used by a grateful offerer as he came up to the temple to present to Jehovah the offering which he had promised in connection with a vow. The second stanza describes in general terms the reason for his gratitude: because Jehovah has answered the prayer uttered with his vow. The psalmist's own experience is, without reasonable doubt, the occasion of this poem, although it doubtless found a place in the Psalter because it was adapted to use by others who in the same way came to present their sacrifice which they had vowed. It may even have been used by the community in connection with some great deliverance. There are no clear indications regarding its date. The strong repetitious and liturgical note suggests the Gk. or Maccabean age.

^{b 66}¹⁴ Lit., which parted my lips.

^{i 66}¹⁶ The current Eng. translations do not follow the Heb. order in this vs.

^{j 66}¹⁷ So Syr., supported in part by Lat.

^{k 66}¹⁸ This vs. destroys the close connection between ¹⁷ and ¹⁹ and is possibly secondary.

§ 78 This composite ps. was probably written to be used by those who brought votive offerings to the temple. The refrain which appears originally to have been introduced at the end of every three lines has been restored in ⁵. ⁷. ⁸. ¹⁰. ¹¹. ¹². ¹³. As Cobb has pointed out, ⁷. ¹⁰ are not intelligible without the refrain which is itself inferred. The refrain may, as Duhm suggests, have been uttered by the offerer, while the rest of the ps. was chanted by the temple singers. The liturgical form, the Aramaic words, and the strong emphasis on the ceremonial type of religion point to the Gk. period. The interest and value consist in the prominent place which the ps. undoubtedly occupied in the worship of the common people.

¹116¹ So Gk., Lat., and Syr. Heb., my voice and my supplications.

²116² The Heb. is evidently corrupt and the versions have various readings, which point, however, to the refrain which has been restored above.

³116³ Heb., my resting place.

⁴116⁴ So Gk., Lat., and certain Syr. MSS. Heb., thou hast delivered.

⁵116⁵ So Syr. A scribe has added in the Heb. the duplicate phrase mine eyes from tears, but this is clearly secondary. Vss. ⁶. ⁹ are taken from 56¹².

^a 116²⁰ Heb. repeats here ¹⁰, but it is properly omitted in the Syr.

^c 116¹⁹ The last line in the Heb. reads, in the midst of thee, O Jerusalem, which is probably a corruption of the refrain which has been restored above.

§ 79 The prominent liturgical motive in this ps. points to a date at least as late as the Gk. period. The reference to the exodus in ⁵ leaves little doubt that the feast in connection with which this little hymn was sung was that of the Passover. The remainder of the ps. deals with an entirely different theme and was, without reasonable doubt, added by a later editor. Cf. § 174.

§ 81 The VSS. join this ps. to the preceding, but this union was probably not original but for later liturgical use. One theme unites this ps., although the alternating lines in 9-11 were probably sung antiphonally, ¹² by the people, and ¹³ by the high priest. The ps. as a whole, because of its vigor and strong religious feeling, was well adapted to use in public service. The contrast here is between Israel's one God, unseen but revealed in the nation's life, and the gods of the heathen represented by the lifeless images. The historical student feels here the beginning of the mortal struggle which commenced in the latter part of the Gk. period and culminated in the Maccabean uprising. The hopeful spirit and the prominence of the house of Aaron point to the earlier part of the second century B.C.

³Out of Zion bless Jehovahⁿ who hath made heaven and earth.

^{1115⁹} So Gk. and Syr. and the parallel in 135¹⁰. Heb. omits house of.

^{1115⁹} So Gk., which here and in the following vss. has the perfect instead of the imperative. The change was probably made under the influence of the parallel in 135¹⁰⁻¹¹, where the imperative occurs instead of the third person.

^{1115¹¹} Probably proselytes. Cf. the devout Greeks of the N.T.

^{1115¹⁰} Gk., Lat., Syr., Targ., heavens of heavens. But a slight revision of the Heb. suggested by Briggs, Pss. II, 397, gives the above harmonious reading.

§ 82 This little pilgrim ps. was addressed to the Levites who guarded the temple and probably carried on its musical services far into the night. Like most of the pilgrim ps., it doubtless comes from the Gk. period.

^{134³} Following Briggs in restoring the line as the context demands. The traditional text reads, Jehovah bless thee out of Zion.

This hymn cannot be earlier than the Gk. period. The references in 10, 11, as well as the position of the ps. in the Psalter, suggest that it comes from the Maccabean era.

§ 84 This highly liturgical ps. is a composite of ideas and phrases derived from earlier O.T. writing. Thus the opening vs. is found also in 106¹, 107¹, and 118¹. Vss. 2, 3 are an echo of Dt. 10¹⁷; vs. 4 of Ps. 72¹⁸ and 86¹⁰; vs. 5 of Jer. 10¹²; vs. 6 of Is. 42⁵; and 7-9 of Gen. 1¹⁶⁻¹⁸. Dt., II Is., Gen. 1, and other comparatively late pss. are the chief sources. This dependence indicates that this ps. was probably not written before the Gk. period. The allusion to Jehovah's deliverance of his people from their adversaries, in ²², and the exultant note that pervades the ps. point to the Maccabean era, when the people rejoiced over their victories. Sopherim 18¹² states that in later times it was sung on the seventh day of the feast of Unleavened Bread. Its didactic purpose is evident, and it may originally have been chanted in the synagogue, the leader reciting the first line in each couplet and the people or temple singers joining in the recurring refrain.

^t136¹ Lit., the feeling of love and mercy that prompts kindly acts.

^u136² Lit., is eternal.

^y 136¹⁹⁻²² These vss. are regarded by some commentators as a later insertion, for they depart from the regular theme of the ps. But cf. ^a, ^b, ¹² for a similar departure. In a highly composite ps. of this character it is difficult to distinguish with assurance earlier and later strata.

^a 136²² Cf. 135¹¹, his people.

§ 85 This Hallel ps. is preceded and followed by the liturgical formula Hallelujah. That at the end is not found, however, in the Gk. Vs. ⁴ is quoted in I Mac. 2^{23b}, indicating that it is at least earlier than the date of that book. It comes either from the latter part of the Gk. or the earlier part of the Maccabean period. Its confident, exultant note, perhaps, points to the reign of Simon, who worthily imitated the divine King in championing the needy and in freeing Jewish captives. Cf. I Mac. 13.

^c 146⁹ The line is based on Ps. 1⁶, Job 8², 34¹², and Ecc. 7¹². It may be secondary, for it is loosely connected with its context.

§ 86 Ps. 147 contains two originally independent poems. They are still separate in the Gk. but have been united in the Heb., probably because they deal with the same theme and in very much the same way. Briggs (cf. Duhm's order: 1-2, 3, 7, 4, 5, 8-11) also finds two poems in 1-4 and 7-11; but 7-9 and 4-6 are too closely parallel in thought to be separated and 1-11 makes a complete and logical literary unit. Like the other hymns of thanksgiving in this collection, it was probably first sung to celebrate the Maccabean victories.

§ 87 This little liturgical ps. is richly suggestive of the spirit of the Jews in the days of Simon, when at last they were at comparative peace with the ring of attacking foes which in the earlier days of the Maccabean struggle had enmeshed them, ¹⁴. It voices the satisfaction and thanksgiving with which they viewed their unwonted prosperity.

^h 147¹⁵ Cf. Gen. 1 for the same idea of Jehovah's rule by command.

§ 88 This ps. is an expansion of Ps. 103^{n. 21}. It is further expanded in the Song of the Three Children. It is based on Gen. 1. Its broad outlook suggests the Greek or Maccabean period. Its place at the close of the Psalter indicates that it was one of the seven doxologies added to the earlier collections of hymns by the final editors of the book of Psalms.

Hymns of Adoration and Trust.—The hymns of adoration and trust are, as a rule, earlier, less national, more personal, and more philosophical than the hymns of thanksgiving and praise. Also they are not so closely connected with special events in Israel's history. The date of the individual ps. is less certain and less important. These hymns as a whole constitute the noblest group in the Psalter. Most of them sprang from the period when the Jewish race was the victim of bitter persecution and injustice. Many of them still reflect the stress and anguish amidst which they were born. They present theology not in theory but in action and beget in turn a faith which is not static but kinetic and dynamic.

§ 91 This ps. bears the superscription, For the musical director. To be sung to a vintage song. Psalm of David. Its dependence upon Gen. 1 is obvious. Vs. ³, however, reveals familiarity with the account of creation in Gen. 2. Probably the author knew the book of Genesis in its present composite form. The ps. also has certain words and expressions not found in the O.T. except in the writings of the Persian and following periods. The peaceful atmosphere also strongly suggests the prosperous days immediately following the reforms of Nehemiah and Ezra. The ps. is a majestic evening hymn eminently appropriate for public worship. The three-beat measure is prevailingly used except in the first line of the refrain found at the beginning and end of the ps.

^b8² I. e., in response to the cry of the weakest.

^c8³ Heavens is, perhaps, but the explanation of a scribe, as the measure and sense are complete without it. Possibly the original read sun.

^d8⁴ Lit., thou hast made him lack little of God.

^e8⁵ Lit., putting all things under his feet.

⁶From one end of the heavens he setteth out,

¹⁸ Lit., fish of the sea.

§ 92 This ps. has the common title, For the music director, A Psalm of David. Here two distinct poems have been combined: the first, ¹⁻⁶, in praise of God's glory as revealed in the heavens; the second, ⁷⁻¹⁴, in praise of the law. Cf. § 177. They were doubtless combined for liturgical use in order to bring these two witnesses of God's glory into suggestive combination and contrast. The first poem is clearly the older and prevailing employs the four-beat, while the second ps. has the five-beat measure. The full appreciation of God as the Lord of the universe first finds expression in the exilic and post-exilic periods. The author clearly lived in the atmosphere which produced the majestic first chapter of Gen. The influence of certain of the noble Assyr. and Bab. hymns to Shamash, the sun-god, may also be recognized. Vss. ⁵. ⁶ have much in common with the ancient hymn:

*O Shamash! out of the horizon of the heavens thou issuest forth,
The bolt of the bright heavens thou openest,
The door of heaven thou dost open.
O Shamash! over the world dost thou raise thy head;
O Shamash! with the glory of heaven thou coverest the world.*

Equally majestic is the ascription to the setting sun:

*O sun-god in the midst of heaven at thy setting,
May the enclosure of the pure heaven greet thee,
May the gate of heaven approach thee,
May the directing god, the messenger who loves thee, direct thy way.
May the glory of thy divinity be established for thee.
O Shamash! warrior hero, may thou be exalted!
O lord of E-babbara, as thou marchest, may thy course be directed!
Direct thy path, march along the path fixed for thy course(?).
O Shamash! judge of the world, director of its laws art thou.*

It has also been suggested that the original poem once described in a succeeding stanza the course of the moon across the starry heavens. This certainly is implied in ². The later description of the law may well have been substituted for this stanza by the priestly editors who were zealous to remove all traces of the popular moon worship.

²19² Following a suggestion of Dr. A. A. Madsen in translating the Heb. idiom, lit., day to day, night to night, as the context absolutely demands, for it is the voiceless testimony not of day and night but of the starry heavens that has gone out in all the earth and in them that God has prepared a tent for the sun, ⁴.

³19³ Correcting the Heb. as the context demands. The current reading, line, is clearly based on a corrupt text.

¹19⁴ Modern Jewish marriages still take place under a canopy.

¹19⁵ Lit., a race.

§ 93 This is one of the most poetic and powerful ps. in the Psalter. It opens with the command that the heavenly beings join in praising Jehovah's majesty and power. These divine attributes are then illustrated by the thunder-storm. Wagner, in his powerful opera, The Flying Dutchman, has produced something of the same effect. Here, without the accompaniment of music the Heb. poet has reproduced in mere words the effect of the storm. The ps. is written in the four-beat, except the second stanza, which describes the storm in the distance and is in the three-beat measure. This stanza vividly pictures the thunder-cloud as it hangs low over the Mediterranean and the reverberating peals of thunder. The second stanza portrays the storm as it sweeps over the heights of Lebanon and Hermon, breaking the proud cedars and making them skip like calves, while the forked lightning flashes, accompanied by the thunder, Jehovah's voice. Eastward the storm sweeps, until in the third stanza it is described as it rushes out across the Jordan into the wilderness east of the Jordan. Finally, the storm passes, and in the great calm that follows Jehovah is seen, as in Isaiah's vision, enthroned in his temple as he was at the beginning of creation on the great flood. The conclusion of this dramatic ps. is an assurance that Jehovah, the omnipotent, will strengthen and give peace to his people. The ps. began with a vision of Jehovah in heaven above and it ends with the divine King in the midst of his people. It began with a storm and ends in majestic stillness.

The indications of date are few. Vs. ² implies a well-developed priesthood. In ¹⁰ the priestly word for flood is employed, indicating that the ps. is probably post-exilic. Vss. ¹, ² are quoted with slight variations in Ps. 96^{7-9*} and I Chr. 16²³⁻²⁵, so that it must be earlier than the Gk. period. Its recognition of God's revelation through nature connects it closely with the poem of Job, and its date was probably the middle or latter part of the Persian period.

^k 29¹ I. e., the sons of the gods which appear in the prologue to the book of Job.

^l 29² I. e., the garments of worshippers.

§ 94 As has been already noted, § 38, Ps. 89, contains an early post-exilic ps. to which a later psalmist has added the present hymn of adoration in order to adapt the whole to liturgical use. Its literary affinities are with the late post-exilic writings: II Is., Zech., and Job, e. g., the use of the term holy ones to designate angels, ⁶. ⁷. Cf. Job 5¹, 15¹⁵, Zech. 14⁵. Its background is the period of hopefulness and quiet following the work of Nehemiah. It belongs, therefore, to the last half of the Persian or the earlier part of the Gk. period.

^o89² Through a scribal error the Gk. and Lat., thou hast said, required at the beginning of ³ as it now stands, has been transferred to the beginning of ². Also in the editorial revision of the ps. it has been changed to, for I said; also an original, by thy mouth or command, now reads, by my command, and has been connected by the Massoretic editors with the end of ¹ rather than with the beginning of ² as the metre and parallelism require.

^p89² So Gk. and Syr. Heb., is established.

^q89⁶ Heb. adds in, but it destroys the parallelism.

^r89⁶ I. e., the angels. Cf. Ps. 29¹. ², Job 5¹.

^s89⁷ Restoring the Heb. with the aid of the Gk.

^t89⁸ Emending the practically impossible Heb. by the aid of the well-established parallelism.

^u89¹⁰ A reference to the ancient Semitic myth which told of Jehovah's contest at creation with the great monster that represented chaos. Cf. Job 9¹³, 26¹².

^v89¹⁰ Lit., pierced through.

^w89¹⁰ The enemies were probably the malignant spirits that were represented as supporting Rahab.

Ps. 104 ¹Bless, Jehovah, O my soul!

In the heavens

O Jehovah, my God, thou art very great;
 Thou art clothed with honor and majesty,
²Who puttest on light as a mantle,
 Who stretchest out the heavens like a curtain,
³Who layeth the beams of his chambers in the waters,
 Who maketh the clouds his chariot,
 Who walketh upon the wings of the wind,
⁴Who maketh the winds his messengers,
 Fire and^a flame are his ministers.

⁵Thou didst lay^a the earth upon its foundations,
 That it should not be moved forever.
⁶Thou coveredst it with the deep as with a garment;^b
 The waters stood above the mountains.
⁷At thy rebuke they fled;
 At the sound of thy thunder they hasted away,^c ⁸That they may not pass over the bound thou hadst set,
 That they may not return to cover the earth.
⁹The mountains rose, the valleys sank,
 To the place which thou hadst founded for them.

In the work of creation

^x 89¹⁵ I. e., of the trumpets and melody in connection with the worship of Jehovah at his temple.

^y 89¹⁶ I. e., Jehovah's people join with the two chief mountains of Palestine, cf. ¹², in praising his character.

§ 95 The poet, in ¹, describes this ps. as a meditation and expresses the hope that it will be sweet to Jehovah. The description is felicitous. It is one of several ps. which reveal the impression that the contemplation of nature made on the deeply religious Heb. mind. The psalmist also had before his mental vision Gen. 1 and 2 in their present composite form, Is. 40²², Job 38¹⁻¹¹, so that he probably lived in the Gk. period. It is possible that it was written by a Jew who had visited or resided in Egypt, for it resembles at many points the famous hymn of Amenhotep IV, the great reforming king of Egypt. Cf. Intro., p. 38, Breasted, Hist. of Eg., 371-376. It is also possible that the poet passes abruptly, as in ³, ¹², to the third person under the influence of the older Egyptian hymn.

The psalmist shares the common Semitic conception of the universe: the earth is a great plain above which rises the firmament with the sun, moon, and stars. All these are encircled by waters. In the waters above the earth is heaven, the divine chambers in which God dwells and from which he descends on the wind-driven clouds.

^a 104⁴ Revising the Heb. slightly as the context implies. Trad. Heb., fire of flame.

^a 104⁴ Lat. and Targ. carry on the preceding construction. The above reading is supported by the parallelism.

^b 104⁶ Or, revising the text, the deep—like a garment was it covered, or, the deep covered it as with a garment. The idea is that the chaos of waters covered the entire earth.

^c 104⁷ The immediate and logical sequel of ⁷ is ⁸. Vs. ⁹ after ⁸ is impossible, for the mountains and valleys could not return to cover the earth as had the waters. After ⁸ vs. ⁹ completes the picture of creation. These vs. were transposed because a Heb. scribe confused the somewhat similar initial words in each. Vs. ^{9b} is usually regarded as the sequel of ⁷, but its verb does not apply to waters, but solid bodies, as in ⁵.

²⁶Leviathan,^k which thou hast made to play with.

^d104¹⁰ Possibly the direct address was originally used throughout this ps.

^e104¹² Probably the order is correct: the streams and the vegetation.

^f104¹⁴ Cf. Gen. 3¹⁷⁻¹⁹.

^g104¹⁶ I. e., the great trees like the cedars of Lebanon.

^h104²¹ As in Job 38⁴, the beasts look to God as the ultimate source of their supply.

ⁱ104²³ Following the superior Gk. and the demands of the context. Heb., riches. This reading is due to a slight verbal error.

^j104²⁵ Or, gliding, i. e., all kinds of fish and small sea life.

^k104²⁶ The next vs. indicates that the poet is still describing God's creatures. The initial line, there go the ships, appears to be from a later scribe who associated ships with the sea.

GOD'S WORKS OF CREATION

²⁷These all wait for thee,
That thou mayest give them their food in due season.
²⁸Thou givest to them, they gather it;
Thou openest thy hand, they are well satisfied.

Praise
to Jehovah

¹ 104²⁹ A scribe familiar with Ecc. has added and return to the dust.

^m 104³⁰ I. e., as at creation thou dost cause the earth to be covered with living things.

ⁿ 104³¹⁻³⁴. ³⁵ This closing refrain was probably added to adapt the ps. to liturgical use. A Maccabean scribe has also added:

*Let sinners be consumed out of the earth,
And let the wicked be no more.*

These lines reflect an entirely different spirit from that which pervades the ps. and reveals the point of view of the Maccabean age, for sinners probably refers to the foes of the Jews.

§ 96 This poem does not fit in the mouth of Hannah, for it is a national rather than an individual ps. A later editor placed it in the Samuel history because of the allusion in ¹⁰ to "the barren that hath borne seven." The reference does not apply to Hannah but is rather a common Semitic figure of prosperity. The reference in ¹⁰ is apparently to a messianic king. The absence of such allusions in the literature following the deposition of Zerubbabel after the rebuilding of the second temple in 516 B.C. and the prominence of those hopes in the years immediately preceding favor the conclusion that this ps. comes from the days of hopefulness and keen expectancy immediately following the stirring sermons of Haggai in 520 B.C. On the other hand, the references to the godly, the afflicted, and the arrogant point to a date nearer the middle of the Persian period. In any case the ps. is probably post-exilic. Its style is simple and direct. Its faith is strong and its teachings resemble those of the book of Proverbs. Its influence on the Magnificat is obvious. Cf. Lk. 1⁴⁸⁻⁴⁹.

^a ²¹ Cf., for the same figure, Ps. 92¹⁰. The horn was the symbol of the power to accomplish.

^b ²¹ So Gk., Luc., Lat., and many MSS. Heb., in Jehovah.

^c ²¹ Lit., is enlarged. Cf. Is. 57⁴.

^d ²¹ So Gk. and Luc. In the Heb. the for has been transposed to the second line.

^e ²¹ Following the text suggested by the Gk. and Luc., which is strongly supported by the parallelism and metrical structure. Heb., for there is none beside thee.

JEHOVAH'S PROVISIONS FOR MAN

There is none righteous like our God,
And there is no Rock beside thee.

Warning to opposers

³Do not go on speaking haughtily,^f
Nor let arrogance come from your mouth,
For a God of knowledge is Jehovah,
And by him actions are weighed.^g
⁴The bow of the mighty is broken,
But the weak^h are girded with strength.
⁵The sated hire themselves out for food,
While the famished cease from toil;ⁱ
For the barren hath borne seven,
And the mother of many mourneth.

Jehovah's just rule

⁶Jehovah killeth and giveth life,
Bringeth down to Sheol and bringeth up.
⁷Jehovah maketh poor and maketh rich,
Bringeth low and also setteth on high,
⁸He raiseth the poor from the dust,
From the dunghill he raiseth up the needy,
He maketh them sit with the nobles of the people,
And assigneth^j them an honorable place.^k

His care for his people

⁹The feet of his godly ones will he guard,^l
But the wicked shall perish in darkness,
For by strength a man is not mighty.
¹⁰Jehovah will shatter his enemies,^m
Upon them will he thunder in the heavens.ⁿ
Jehovah will judge the whole earth;^o
He will give strength to his king,
And will exalt the horn of his anointed.

^f2³ So Gk. The Heb. has an unnecessary repetition which is out of harmony with the regular metrical structure of the poem.

^g2³ The standard Heb. text is probably corrupt. It might read, And evil actions are not right, lit., adjusted (to the standard). The marginal reading and a slightly corrected Heb. text give the above reading. This text may have been before the translators of Gk. and Luc., which read, a God who weigheth actions. The meaning at least is the same.

^h2⁴ Lit., those who stumble.

ⁱ2⁵ Slightly correcting the corrupt Heb. Gk. and Luc., earth.

^j2⁵ Lit., causes them to inherit.

^k2⁵ The lines:

*For the pillars of the earth are Jehovah's,
And he hath set the world upon them,* are not found in the Gk. and break the close sequence of thought between the preceding line and ⁹. It seems clear, therefore, that they are a later addition, as is also the corresponding Gk. rendering,

*Granting the prayer to the one who prays,
And blessing the righteous with years.*

The latter evidently aimed to adapt the ps. to its present literary setting.

^l2⁹ This line is lacking in the Gk. and Luc. It may also be a later addition.

^m2¹⁰ Correcting the Heb. with the aid of the Gk.

ⁿ2¹⁰ Gk., He hath gone up into the heavens and thundered. A possible correction of the text reads, The Almighty in heaven will destroy them.

^o2¹⁰ Lit., ends of the earth.

§ 97 Two very different themes are treated in Ps. 36. In ¹⁻⁴ is found a wisdom ps. describing the thoroughly bad man. Cf. § 181. Possibly a later editor combined the two in order to bring into clear contrast Jehovah's goodness and man's perverseness. The feeling of satisfaction and thanksgiving expressed in ⁵⁻⁹ points to the latter part of the Persian period, when Nehemiah's work had brought prosperity to the Jewish community. Possibly ¹² is a later Maccabean addition.

^p36⁵ This vs. is quoted in 57¹⁰ and echoed in 108⁵.

^q36⁶ Lit., mountains of El.

^r36⁸ The Heb. adds Jehovah, but it destroys the regular metre of the vs. and is superfluous. Possibly this line is secondary.

^o36⁹ Lit., the fatness of thy house, as in 23⁵ and elsewhere in the ps., the faithful are thought of as the guests of Jehovah. The river of delight or pleasures is evidently the river of Eden. Esek. 47¹⁻⁴ and Zech. 14⁸ picture a life-giving stream issuing from the temple.

§ 98 The symmetry of this beautiful ps. has been obscured by the vs. division to which it was subjected in the middle ages. It is written in the emotional five-beat measure by a poet who, like the author of Ps. 23, was keenly appreciative of the privilege of worshipping in Jehovah's temple. Song service and vows are regarded by men as the gifts most pleasing to God. The figure of the earth watered by irrigation, in ³, ¹⁰, suggests that he was familiar with the agricultural methods of either Babylonia or Egypt. The universal outlook in ² also points to a post-exilic date. Vs. ⁹ contains echoes of the II Is. The background of the ps. is bright and hopeful. It comes either from the latter part of the Persian or the earlier part of the Gk. period.

^t65¹ Lit., is like to thee, i. e., befits.

^u65¹ Heb., God; but this is due to the work of a later editor.

^v65³ So Gk. Heb., for me.

Ps. 103 ¹Bless Jehovah, O my soul,

^w 65⁵ Revising the text with Wellhausen.

^x 65⁷ A scribe has added the clause, and the tumult of the peoples. It or the preceding clause is secondary, for together they destroy the metre and the figure.

^y 65⁸ Probably an allusion to the song services at sunrise and sunset.

^a 65⁸ Restoring the last part of this line as the parallelism suggests. The thought appears to be that all peoples, east and west, unite in Jehovah's praise.

^b 65⁹ Adding Jehovah, required to complete the measure.

^c 65¹⁰ Supplying the with required in English to bring out the logical meaning. The figure of irrigated fields runs through ⁹. ¹⁰.

^d 65¹² A scribe has added the flock.

§ 99 This supplement to the prayer in 144¹⁻¹¹ has no connection with its context and is, beyond reasonable doubt, a fragment from an independent ps. It breathes the peace and contentment of the Maccabean period.

^e 144¹² A scribe has added, in order to connect this ps. with the preceding, the relative which.

§ 100 This ps. comes from the school of the wise. It is a meditation as well as a prayer of adoration. Its appreciation of Jehovah's character and attitude toward men, its childlike, filial trust, and its faith in his universal kingdom and rule all connect it closely with the teachings of Jesus. Here is the atmosphere in which the Master Builder of Nazareth was reared, and here is the heart of that universal message which made him the Saviour of men. The dependence upon Jer., II Is., and Ps. 90³. ⁴, the Aram. words, the didactic note, and the hopeful yet not arrogant spirit of the ps. indicate that it probably comes from the Gk. period.

JEHOVAH'S GOODNESS

ⁿ 103ⁿ A scribe has added in the Heb., from ¹¹, to those who fear him. The same scribe possibly added ¹⁸, for it lacks the metrical symmetry of the rest of the ps. and limits the universality of the passage. It also defines piety in the restricted, late priestly sense. Vss. ¹⁰ ff. are the immediate logical sequel of ¹⁷. The same scribe has added Jehovah at the beginning of ¹⁰, although it destroys the metrical symmetry of the line and was made necessary only by the insertion of ¹⁸.

^p 103²⁰ So Syr. Heb. adds giving heed to the voice of his word.

§ 101 This ps. is a majestic monologue addressed to Jehovah. Its originality and depth of thought give it a unique place among Israel's lyrics. The famous Jewish commentator, Aben Ezra, called it the crown of the Psalter. Nowhere in the O.T. is the omniscience and immanence and unceasing care of God set forth more nobly. Amos, in 9²⁻⁴, was the first of the prophets to declare that Jehovah's rule extended throughout the universe. In 12-15 there are traces of the Gk. scientific spirit. Unfortunately, the text in the latter part of the ps. is uncertain, owing to scribal errors. Possibly 10-24 are later additions. The ps. is individual. It probably comes from the Gk. period and shows the influence of the thought of the wise.

^a 139² Following the reading of certain MSS. and the demands of the context. Another possible reading is friends, but this is not supported by the parallelism.

^r 139³ Or searchest out.

^s 139⁵ The Heb. word also may mean beset. The Gk., Syr., and Lat. have a text meaning to form. The context implies watchful care, not an antagonistic attitude.

^t 139⁶ Gk. and Syr., thy knowledge.

^u 139⁸ For the same idea, cf. Am. 9².

^v 139⁸ Lit., spread out Sheol, i. e., the lower world.

^w 139⁹ Gk. and Syr., my wings to the dawn. At any rate the antithesis is between the East, represented by dawn, and the West, represented by the far-extending sea.

^x 139¹⁰ Slightly correcting the Heb., which reads, lead.

^y 139¹¹ The meaning of the Heb. verb is not certain.

 They have become to me mine enemies.
²⁵Search me, O God, and know my heart,

¹² 139¹² Or, is not too dark for thee. AmRV, hideth not from thee.
¹³ 139¹³ A scribe has added in the Heb. the explanatory note, as the darkness as the light. The Gk. substitutes this for the preceding couplet.
¹⁴ 139¹⁴ A scribe has prefixed to this line I praise thee for, which destroys its logical and metrical unity.
¹⁵ 139¹⁵ So Gk., Syr., and Lat. Heb., I am made. It also adds thy works.
¹⁶ 139¹⁶ A more literal but less metrical translation would be me, for the Heb. word is here used as a reflexive pronoun, as frequently.
¹⁷ 139¹⁷ Possibly this line is secondary. It introduces an idea alien to Heb. thought.
¹⁸ 139¹⁸ This vs. is doubtful. The Heb. is usually translated unformed substance or embryo. This translation fits the immediate context but is not supported by the following verb and pronominal suffix which are plural. The Heb. word is probably due to a confusion of the two Heb. words meaning all my days. At best the translation of the vs. is uncertain.
¹⁹ 139¹⁹ Connecting the words to me or mine with the preceding line, as the metre requires.
²⁰ 139²⁰ Again, as in ², slightly revising the Heb., which reads, thy friends, but makes little sense.
²¹ 139²¹ Lit., heads of them. The author probably had in mind the totals. Cf. Ps. 119¹⁶⁰, The sum of thy word is truth, or Ex. 30¹².
²³ 139²³ Contrary to our more enlightened thought, the later Jews regarded hatred of Jehovah's enemies as a positive virtue.

§ 102 Pss. 42 and 43 were originally one hymn, for, unlike the ps. which precede and follow, it has no superscription, and the same refrain, found in 42⁵, ¹¹ and in 43⁵, binds the whole together. This hymn was evidently written by an exile who had been banished from Jerusalem and apparently had found refuge in the upper Jordan near the foot of Mount Hermon. As king or high priest or Levite, he had participated prominently in the temple service, 42⁴. Exiled among the heathen, he was compelled daily to face the taunts of his enemies, ¹⁰. His chief lament, however, was that he was unable to share in the worship of the temple; but his faith enabled him to rise above his sorrows and to cherish the unwavering hope that he would yet be restored to Jerusalem, 42¹¹. Certain modern commentators, e. g., Duhm, identify the poet with the high priest Onias III, who was driven from Jerusalem by Scopas, commander of Ptolemy Epiphanes. The man of deceit in 43¹ is identified with Simon or the traitorous Jason. While this identification is possible, it is probable, in view of the close parallelism between this ps. and 63, that the author was a high priest or Levite banished from Jerusalem at the time when Jehoiachin (597 B.C.) was

^b 42¹ So Syr. and Targ. A later editor has systematically changed the original Jehovah to Elohim (God) throughout this and the following group of ps. In the translation which follows the original has been restored.

^c 42² Or, God of my life.

^d 42² Correcting the Heb. with the aid of the Syr. and Targ.

^e 42³ So Syr. and certain other MSS. and the parallel in ¹⁰. The Heb. has lost the pronominal suffix.

^f 42⁴ This and the following line has possibly suffered in transmission. The Gk. and Syr. have a somewhat different rendering, but the reference is clearly to the solemn march on the great festal days.

^g 42⁵ So Gk., Syr., Sym., and the similar refrain in ¹¹ and 43⁵.

^h 42⁵ Again restoring the corrupt Heb. with the aid of the Gk., Syr., and subsequent parallels.

ⁱ 42⁵ The psalmist had evidently found refuge in the upper Jordan valley near Mount Hermon. Mizar, which means little, was probably the designation of one of the lesser peaks near Mount Hermon.

LONGING THAT GOD ALONE CAN SATISFY

⁷Deep calleth unto deep at the sound of thy cataracts;¹
 Thy breakers and thy billows have all passed over me.²
⁹I say to God, my Rock, Why hast thou forgotten me?
 Why must I go about mourning under the oppression of mine enemy?
¹⁰While there is a shattering in my bones, my adversaries deride me?
 While they say to me all the day long, 'Where is thy God?'

Why art thou cast down, O my soul,
 And why art thou disquieted within me?
 Wait thou for Jehovah, for I shall yet praise him,
 Who is the salvation of my countenance and my God.

Refrain

43 ¹Judge me, and plead my cause against an unkind people;
 From the man of deceit and wickedness do thou deliver me, O Jehovah;¹

carried into captivity. The ps. pulsates with deep emotion. It was written by a lover of God and of his worship and abounds in original and powerful ideas and figures of speech. The measure, under the stress of feeling, rises at times from the prevailing three-beat to the four and, in the concluding section, to the five-beat measure.

¹⁴² A reference to the rushing streams which break out from the rock on the southern side of Mount Hermon.

¹⁴² A scribe has added the following lines, which introduce a thought entirely alien to the context and lacking the regular metrical form that characterizes the ps.:

*By day Jehovah commandeth his lovingkindness,
 And by night his song is with me,
 My prayer is to the God of my life.*

¹⁴³ Transferring the word Jehovah, Heb., God, from the first line, where it destroys the metre, to the second line, where it completes it.

¹⁴³ Possibly certain MSS., which read, comfort me, have retained the original.

¹⁴³ Following one MS., which is strongly supported by the context, and reading the following verb as the first pers. sing. rather than the imperfect. The Heb. text has evidently been corrupted at this point.

§ 103 In point of view this ps. is closely related to 42, 43. The author has participated in the joyous worship of the temple and now yearns passionately for a renewal of the same privilege. His faith in God, however, is undaunted by his enforced exile or by the foes who seek his life. He feels the divine presence guarding him and upholding him wherever he may be. The introduction of the king in the last vs. presents a difficult problem. Is the entire ps. the prayer of a royal exile like Jehoiachin? Possibly, but it seems more probable that it was uttered by a contemporary and a loyal supporter of the exiled king and that it comes from the early part of the Bab. period. Vss. ⁹⁻¹¹ have been regarded by certain scholars as a later addition, but the reference is clearly to a Heb. king, and it ill fits either of the Mac. rulers who assumed that title. These vss. have the same measured beat and the regular six-line structure that characterize the preceding strophes of this poem. They also constitute a natural ending to this impassioned hymn of adoration and trust.

^{o63} The first line of this ps., as frequently in three-beat ps., begins with an impressive four-beat line.

^p63¹ The present Heb. reads, In a dry and weary land where no water is. This makes little sense and is not in accord with the hopeful spirit of the ps. Evidently the line has suffered in transmission. The above rendering is based on a conservative revision of the text. Briggs translates, as a dry land it faints for thee; Duhm, as a dry, waterless land.

^q63² Recalling the joy that he had in beholding the public worship in the temple and, like Isaiah (Is. 6), perceiving the divine reality symbolized by that worship.

^r63⁵ Lit., my soul.

^s63⁵ Possibly fatness, which destroys the metrical symmetry of this line, is secondary.

^t63⁵ Mouth is not found in the Gk. and may be an addition.

^u65⁴ Or, when.

^v63⁸ Lit., cleaveth after thee.

^w63⁹ Heb., to destroy it.

^x63¹¹ A scribe has apparently added the explanatory gloss, For the mouth of those who speak lies shall be stopped.

§ 104 Commentators are generally agreed that Ps. 27 contains two independent poems. The first has the five-beat measure and is uttered either by the community or by its leader. The other, ⁷⁻¹⁴, cf. § 158, is in the three-beat measure and was written by a private person. The invincible faith which this ps. expresses is timeless. Its thought is related on the one side to 42, 43,

CONFIDENCE IN DIVINE PROTECTION

³Whenever evil-doers come upon me to devour my flesh,
They who are mine adversaries and my foes, they stumble and fall.
⁴Though a host should encamp against me, mine heart will not fear,

⁴One thing I ask from Jehovah, that will I seek :⁷
That I may have a vision of the beauty of Jehovah, and that I may inquire in his temple.
⁵Verily he will hide me in his^a covert, in the day of trouble;
He will conceal me in the secret of his tent, he will set me upon a rock.

and 65, in its passionate longing for the service of the temple, and on the other to 46, in its atmosphere of turmoil and its dauntless confidence in Jehovah's power to deliver. It may be one of the few hymns that have come down from the pre-exilic temple, but more probably it was written during the early part of the Persian period.

⁷27^a A marginal note based on ⁵ and 23^a has been introduced by scribes to explain this vs. It is impossible to construe it syntactically and it is inconsistent with the context. It reads, I dwell in the house of Jehovah all the days of my life.

^a27^b Following certain versions and the demands of the context.

^a27^c So Gk., Syr., and Lat. Heb., my head shall be lifted up.

§ 105 This is one of the great ps. of the Psalter. It is immortalized in Luther's Ein feste Burg ist unser Gott. It is unsurpassed in the majesty of its diction and the breadth of its outlook. At the same time its thought is as simple as the faith which it expresses is strong. Its structure is exceedingly artistic and well balanced. It consists of three stanzas of six lines, each concluding with the stirring refrain:

*Jehovah of hosts is with us,
The God of Jacob is our refuge.*

Probably through a scribal error it has been omitted after ². The figure in the opening stanza is that of earthquake and flood. In ² there is possibly a reminiscence of the overwhelming flood in the days of Noah. The second stanza develops the thought that in the midst of this wave of ruin and chaos Jerusalem, the dwelling place of the Most High, stands unmoved, because Jehovah, who rules over all nature, has taken up his abode within her. The third stanza presents a glorious picture of the period when war should cease and Jehovah's rule should be established throughout all the world. The breadth of outlook suggests the teachings of the II Is. Cf. especially 40-48. The description of the destruction of the instruments of war and the establishment of universal peace recall such late exilic passages as Is. 9^a and 11¹⁻¹⁰. The expectation that Jehovah's rule would be established throughout all the world allies it with the post-exilic predictions found in Zech. 3, 8, Mic. 4¹⁻⁴, and Pss. 96-100. The immediate background of this ps. is evidently a period of great world changes. Not one nation, but many nations, figure in the drama of history to which it alludes. It is also a period when a new sense of confidence and security has come to Jehovah's people. Certain scholars in the past have identified the political situation with the overthrow of Sennacherib in the days of Hezekiah, about 690 B.C. The psalmist may have had in mind this incident in Israel's early history, but not one but many hostile nations figure on the broad horizon which he contemplated. Briggs (Pss., I, 393-4) identifies it with the days of the Scythian invasion early in the reign of Josiah. But the missionary ideals and the broad outlook of the psalmist point, beyond reasonable doubt, to an exilic or post-exilic period. Two periods in Israel's history fully satisfy the implications and literary relationships of this ps. One is that which began in 545 with the conquest of southwestern Asia by Cyrus and ended with the firm establishment of the rule of Darius about 518 B.C. It was pre-eminently a period when nations raged and kingdoms tottered. From the contemporary writings of Haggai and Zechariah we know that the hopes that Jehovah would speedily establish his universal kingdom rose high in the hearts of the Jews. This majestic song may have been sung by one who joined with the temple builders in response to the stirring call of Haggai in 520 B.C. If so, he was in thorough sympathy with the hopes expressed in Zech. 1-3. The position of the ps. in the Psalter well accords with this date.

The other possible period is the earlier part of the days immediately following the conquest of Alexander the Great. Again nations were raging and kingdoms were tottering. Through this troublesome period Israel's faith in Jehovah and its consciousness of keeping his law alone preserved it. There is, however, in this ps. a universal note which makes the question of its exact date comparatively unimportant. The faith which it expresses is timeless. Grounded on the experiences of the past it fearlessly contemplated the terrors of the present and the future. It voices the unshakable conviction of Israel's prophets that, in keeping with Jehovah's gracious purpose, the best is yet to be. It also presents that ideal of perfect peace for which the persecuted and oppressed sighed through all the ages.

* 46^g Supplying the word waves, implied and absolutely demanded by the context. It was probably omitted by a scribe who regarded it as a mere repetition of sea.

^f 46^f Following the suggestion of Briggs in connecting the word flood with the preceding vs. The reference is apparently to the waters under the earth, from whence the ancient Semites believed came the perennial supply of water which gushed out through the many springs and fountains. This great deep under the earth was probably conceived of by the psalmist as the source from which came the brooks mentioned in ⁴.

ⁱ 46ⁱ I. e., at the critical moment of her greatest weakness.

^j 46^j The line, What desolations he hath made in the earth, is secondary, for, as Duhm notes, it is prosaic, superfluous, and destroys the sequence of thought and the symmetry of the stanza.

^k 46^k Possibly this line is also secondary.

§ 106 This ps. opens with the superscription found both in the Heb. and Gk., A Psalm of David, when he fled from his son Absalom. The psalmist or else a later editor clearly had in mind the incidents in David's life recorded in II Sam. 16⁷. ⁸, 17¹⁻³. ¹¹. From the contents of the ps., and especially vs. ⁷, it appears that the speaker is either a ruler or the head of a party or else the community itself. The reference in ⁶ to myriads of hostile peoples favors the conclusion that it is a collective ps. spoken in behalf of the community as a whole. Vs. ⁸ confirms this. On the other hand, if this and the ps. which follows it in the Psalter are from the same author, they would both seem to voice the feelings and confidence of the faithful party in the post-exilic community.

The indications as to the exact date of the ps. are few. Holy mountain in ⁴ points rather definitely to the second temple. Foes still ring the psalmist about, although he looks back to a great overthrow that they have received at the hand of Jehovah. The atmosphere of danger and stress and the contrasting calm faith of the psalmist are characteristic of the ps. which come from the early part of the Persian period following the rebuilding of the temple.

The structure of the ps. is remarkably symmetrical. There are four stanzas of four three-beat lines. Selah, at the end of ². ⁴. ⁸, corresponds to this logical division. The first and third stanzas each contain two synthetic couplets; the second and fourth each a synon. followed by a synth. couplet. Stanza II is antithetic to I and IV is synthetic to III.

^{k3} This phrase is exceedingly unusual in the Davidic collection of ps. to which 3 belongs. The Gk. appears to have inserted the phrase before, to him, suggesting that possibly it has come in from the margin.

¹³ The emphatic thou suffices to make the meaning clear. O Jehovah may be a later insertion.

^{m34} I. e., the temple at Jerusalem.

^{o37} The vs. in the Heb. opens with Arise, O Jehovah, help me, my God; but this is out of all keeping with the context which expresses only calm trust. The line is also out of harmony with the regular metre of the ps. The direct sequel of the preceding vs. is ^{7b}.

^{o37} Lit., struck on the jaw. Possibly the last word is a scribal addition.

§ 107 This ps. opens with the superscription, To the musical director. With strong music. Psalm of David. It is an evening prayer, the companion of Ps. 3, which is a morning prayer. There are two striking points of literary resemblance. Cf. ^{6a} and ³². ^{6a} and ^{36a}, which suggest that both are the work of the same author. Both breathe the same serene confidence in Jehovah's power to protect and reflect the same environment of malicious foes. The psalmist's faith is also based on actual experience. He is a man of prominence in the community or else is speaking for the party of the pious. The temple is in existence and he is a supporter of its services, ⁵. In ⁶ and ⁷ he is acquainted with the formula which appears in the high priest's blessing of Nu. 6²⁴⁻²⁶. The peculiar phrase, right sacrifices, in ⁸ is evidently taken from Dt. 33¹⁰. Vss. 7^b, ⁸ also recall Dt. 33²⁸. That the ps. was written under the shadow of the second temple seems clear. Like many ps. of the first Davidic collection, it probably voices the religious trust of the faithful who suffered much at the hands of the mercenary rulers until Nehemiah came to inspire a nobler spirit and a higher ideal in the community as a whole. Cf. Intro., p. 43.

^{a42} So in 49², where men of rank, lit., sons of men, are compared with ordinary men.

^{r42} So Heb., Syr., Targ., and Sym. Gk., will ye be obstinate, why do ye love falsehood. The latter may be the original, but the Heb. yields a good meaning, i. e., how long will ye seek to ruin my reputation? This also best accords with the thought of ³.

^{s42} Correcting the text with the aid of the context and certain MSS.

^{t42} The metrical deficiencies in this line suggest that ye men of rank have fallen out.

^{u42} Gk., be angry, but this possible interpretation of the Heb. does not fit the context.

^{v42} Lit., say in your hearts.

^{w42} Or, who will show us prosperity.

^{x42} The priestly blessing of Nu. 6²⁶; i. e., show favor by bringing material prosperity.

^{y42} Joining this word to the next vs., as in the Syr., supported by the context.

^{z42} The Heb. adds Jehovah, but the emphatic thou renders this unnecessary and the metre indicates that it is an addition.

^{a42} Lit., altogether.

§ 108 This ps. has the superscription, For the musical director. To David. The same taunting enemies within the community figure in this ps. as in most of those found in the early Davidic collection. Trust in Jehovah is the one source of confidence to the psalmist and to the class that he represents. Jehovah and the universe are viewed from the broadened point of view that came from the experiences of the exile. The date of the ps. is to be found some time after the rebuilding of the second temple and before the reforms of Nehemiah. It may be from the author of 3.

^{b111} So Gk. and Lat. Heb., your mountain.

^c 11⁴ So Gk. The object has fallen out of the Heb.
^d 11⁴ Lit., eyelids; it is the poet's picturesque way of describing Jehovah's searching, all-seeing eye.
^e 11⁵ Heb., Jehovah, but this is probably an addition.
^f 11⁵ Lit., his soul.

ⁱ 11⁶ Lit., portion of their cup.
^j 11⁷ Cf. Mt. 5⁸, Blessed are the pure in heart for they shall see God. The Heb. adds, probably as the result of dittography, righteousness.
 § 109 This ps. has suffered much through scribal errors and additions. It is a noble example of faith triumphant over human injustice and fear. It is not clear whether it is an individual or national ps. The individual note is exceedingly strong. The psalmist evidently here expresses his own personal feelings and experiences. At the same time ⁷ implies that the foes to whom he refers are hostile peoples and that, therefore, he is speaking in behalf of the Jewish community as a whole. Vs. ³, where he speaks of the many who fight against him, carries the same implication. In any case the ps. probably comes from the earlier part of the Persian period. Vs. ¹³ implies that the temple service is highly developed. Hostile foes lurk on every side. Apparently no strong protecting wall as yet encircles Jerusalem. The Jews are exposed to constant attack from their enemies. It is a time of affliction and calamity, when Jehovah's people look to him as their only hope and source of protection. The troublesome days preceding the appearance of Nehemiah furnish the natural background of this noble ps.
^k 56¹ Restoring the original reading Jehovah here and elsewhere in the ps., since this is one of a group of pss. in which a later editor has systematically substituted the name God for Jehovah.
^l 56² Transferring the last word of ² to the beginning of ³, as the metre and the context demand.
^m 56⁴ So Lat. and the parallel in vs. ¹⁰. Heb., his word. The restored Heb. reads, lit., word, and the line apparently means, I will boast my words, i. e., openly.
ⁿ 56⁵ Heb., they vex my words, but the Lat. and the parallel line indicate that the above rendering in all probability represents the original.
^o 56⁶ Possibly the text is here corrupt although the general meaning is clear.

⁴They multiply their sorrows^z who pursue other gods,^a

Nor will I take their names on my lips.

^a56⁷ Supplying their.

^a56⁷ Correcting one letter, as the context demands. The Heb. is clearly corrupt and almost unintelligible. Heb. adds, at end of vs., Jehovah.

^r56⁸ Possibly the Heb. is here corrupt. Briggs freely reconstructs so as to read, I make known, I recount them, Yahweh.

^t56⁸ A scribe has added the query, Is it not in thy book? Evidently he did not understand the strong figure employed by the psalmist.

^u56⁹ The Heb. adds in the day that I call, but this is apparently a scribal addition.

^v56¹⁰ In the Heb. a scribe has repeated this line, but has used the divine name Jehovah instead of Elohim, as in the present Heb. text. A comparison with the same refrain in ⁴ confirms the conclusion that this repetition is due to a later scribe.

^v56¹² Restoring by the aid of the parallel in 116⁹.

§ 110 This ps., in all probability, originally recorded the experience and confidence of an individual. Cf. ⁹, ¹⁰. Persecutors, saints, and apostates are within his range of vision, but he himself enjoys peace and prosperity. He appears to have lived some time in the Persian period, possibly while Nehemiah was governor. The ps. was also adapted for use in voicing the feelings of the restored community.

^w16² So VSS. and the clear implication of the context. Heb., thou hast said.

^x16² This last line is omitted in Gk. The above is based upon a reconstruction of the corrupt Heb. by the aid of Syr., Lat., and Targ. Lit., my good is not without thee.

^y16³ The text is evidently corrupt. The above is based on a slightly corrected Lat. text. The entire vs. may be a later gloss. It certainly is not closely connected with the context. A slight change makes it possible to render the first word sacred prostitutes. These are often referred to in connection with the heathen cults of Canaan. One naturally seeks in ³ for the antecedent of they in ⁴. Originally both vss. may have referred to the heathen apostates with whose rites the psalmist states in ^{4b} he will have nothing to do.

^z16⁴ With Duhm, Psalmen, 44, dividing the consonants a little differently. Another of the many possible translations of this vs. is, they multiply their idols, others praise them.

^a16⁴ I. e., worship the heathen gods.

^b 16⁵ Lit., my part. The meaning of the vs. is clear. Heb. adds at the end of the line and my cup, but this introduces an inconsistent figure and an extra beat.

^c 16⁶ I. e., the boundary-lines. The reference is evidently to the tradition of the allotment of the land recorded in Josh. 17². The boundary-lines indicate the territory where the psalmist resides and the lot that has befallen him.

^d 16⁷ Lit., reins, the seat of the emotions and affections.

^e 16⁸ Lit., liver, following a slightly revised Heb. text. The present Heb. reads honor, but this is exceedingly awkward, and the similar Heb. word liver corresponds to heart and designates the organ which the Babylonians as well as the Israelites regarded as the centre of the feelings.

^f 16¹⁰ I. e., to go down to death, Sheol being the Heb. designation of the abode of the shades.

§ 111 This ps. of faith, written in the five-beat measure, has been injected into a three-beat ps. with which it has no logical connection. Cf. § 163. Vs. 28, which completes 22, was separated by the same disruptive process to which this ps. was subjected. This ps. echoes the hopes of Zech. 1-8 and of II Is. It probably comes from the first half of the Persian period or else from the Macabean era.

^g 102¹⁸ Heb. adds, repeating the thought of the preceding clause, for the set time to come.

^h 102¹⁵ Heb., name of Jehovah, but Jehovah is the one addressed.

ⁱ 102¹⁸ Heb. adds it will praise him, but this is apparently a scribal expansion which anticipates 21.

^j 102¹⁹ Again a scribe has expanded by adding from heaven Jehovah.

§ 112. Jehovah's Gracious Care, Ps. 23

As the Good
Shepherd

- Ps. 23 ¹Jehovah is my shepherd, I shall not want,
²He maketh me to lie down in grassy meadows,¹
He leadeth me to the waters of the resting place, ³He continually restoreth my life.

^k 102²⁷ Supplying the Jehovah demanded by the parallelism.

§ 112 This is the most familiar and favorite ps. in the Psalter. Its literary structure is striking: the first stanza has the three-beat measure, the second the four-beat, and the third the emotional five-beat measure. With marvellous feeling and vividness it reflects its picturesque Palestinian background. In the opening stanza the Western translators, in the current versions, have partially obscured the picture. The meadows are the grassy spots along the beds of the wadies where the sheep find the necessary food. The next line describes not quiet streams meandering through the meadows, as the current translation suggests to the Western reader, but the springs, often with pools below, to which the shepherd leads his sheep at noontide or at evening that there they may rest and be refreshed. It was here that not the soul but the vigor or life of the flock was restored. In ⁴ the old translation, the valley of the shadow of death, is not supported by modern Heb. etymology. The reference is rather to the deep, dark wady, through which the passage was especially dangerous because of the wild beasts and other foes lurking in the thickets that skirted the river bed. But in Job 10²¹, 38¹⁷ the same Heb. word is used to describe the abode of the dead, so that the current translations are true to the meaning though not to its etymology.

A recent writer (Knight) in The Song of Our Syrian Guest, in a brilliant and charming monograph, has maintained that the figure of Jehovah as our shepherd runs through the entire ps. There are great difficulties, however, in accepting this alluring thesis. Each stanza with its different metre is a unit in itself. There are no clear traces of the shepherd figure outside the first stanza, which culminates in the leading of the flock to the grassy meadows and the refreshing waters. In the second stanza Jehovah is the guide of his people. The figure is suggested by the tortuous, intersecting, often dimly traced paths that lead over the hills and through the dark wadies of Palestine. The rod and staff in the last line probably represent the stout stick in the hand of the guide that was used as a defence against wild beasts and other foes and a support in walking. Only rarely is the word translated staff used in the O.T. to describe the shepherd's crook. The same elements of striking contrast found in the first stanza reappear in the second. On the one side there is the danger of losing the way and of hostile attacks; on the other the serene confidence inspired by the divine guide. In the third stanza the figure is that of the divine host. The characteristic elements of Oriental hospitality all appear: a generously supplied table, the anointing of the head of the guest with oil, the supply of wine, and the consciousness of protection from surrounding foes. It is difficult to conform this verse to the figure of a shepherd, for in Palestine the fold is not the place where provender and water are set before the flock, for those are found in the grassy meadows and at the springs where the sheep pause at noonday and at eventide. The fold is simply the place where the flock sleep through the night. Again in this stanza there is the same sharp contrast between the encircling enemies and the consciousness of perfect security and restfulness under the protection of the divine Host.

The figure of the shepherd is a familiar one in Israel's literature. It first appears in the ancient tribal song of Gen. 49, where Jehovah, ²⁴, is called the Shepherd of Israel. It was expanded by Ezekiel in 34¹⁴. ¹⁵, with good pasture will I (Jehovah) feed them, and on the high mountains of Israel will be their pasture; there they shall lie down in a good habitation. . . . I myself will be the shepherd of my flocks, and I will lead them to pasture, is the oracle of the Lord Jehovah. It was a favorite figure with II Isaiah. Cf. Is. 40¹¹ and 49¹⁰. The latter passage was probably in the mind of the psalmist:

*They (the returned exiles) shall not be hungry nor thirsty,
 Neither shall the glowing heat nor the sun smite them;
 For he who hath pity on them shall lead them,
 And to gushing fountains shall he guide them.*

The superscription indicates that the psalm was attributed by the later scribes to David, Israel's shepherd king. The reference in ⁶ to the house of Jehovah, however, points clearly to a period when the temple had already been built and when it was the object of that deep adoration which characterized the worshippers who gathered about the second temple. The thought and feeling of the ps. are in a sense timeless, but it voices most clearly the confidence of the Judean community during the middle of the Persian period after Nehemiah's self-sacrificing patriotism had made possible the rebuilding of the walls and a partial restoration of its ancient strength with a resulting sense of security. During the troublesome preceding years Israel had, indeed, known want and passed through a dark, dangerous valley, but now behind its restored walls it felt secure, conscious that Jehovah had again taken up his abode in their holy temple. Even though their enemies pressed them close on every side, they rejoiced in the generous provisions of the divine host. Doubtless the psalmist voices his own personal experiences and gratitude, but the ps. was equally well adapted to expressing the feelings of the members of the Judean community at this bright moment in their history.

^m 23⁴ I. e., gives me assurance so that I fear no evil.

ⁿ 23⁵ Or is exhilarating. So the early Lat. Fathers.

^o 23⁶ Lit., length of days.

§ 113 While the ultimate basis of this ps. was probably the experience of some individual, it apparently voices the feelings of the Judean community after it had emerged from a period of calamity and danger. Cf. ⁵. It reflects the spirit of the faithful within the Judean community after Nehemiah's work had delivered them from the great perils which threatened from within and without. The sense of enjoying Jehovah's favor, of keeping the law, of confidence in his protection and care is strong. The psalmist was evidently a spiritual disciple of Jeremiah and reveals his intimate acquaintance especially with Jer. 7²¹⁻²³ and 31²¹⁻²⁴. To this ps. has been added a ps. of petition, found in vss. 12-17 and again independently in Ps. 70. To join these two ps. together, the editor who blended them has apparently added vs. 12, which reads:

*For innumerable evils have encompassed me about;
 Mine iniquities have taken hold upon me so that I am not able to look up;
 They are more than the hairs of mine head, therefore my heart faileth me.*

In the ps. itself, however, there is no mention of sin and the prevailing note is altogether trusting and hopeful. The text, especially in vss. ⁶, ⁷, has suffered severely in transmission so that it is impossible satisfactorily to render the original. The ps. as a whole strikes a noble note of faith and confidence in Jehovah.

^p 40¹ Heb. adds and heard my cry.

^a 40⁴ Gk., Lat., and Syr. read vanities, which was the post-exilic equivalent for idols. This rendering may possibly be the more original.

THE ASSURANCE OF JEHOVAH'S PROTECTION

⁵Many things hast thou done, O Jehovah, my^r God;

⁹I have proclaimed thy righteousness in the midst of the great congregation.

Behold, I do not refrain my lips, O Jehovah, thou knowest, ¹⁰I have not hid thy faithfulness and thy salvation in my breast,

I have declared, I have not concealed thy lovingkindness and thy truth from the great congregation.

¹¹Thou also, O Jehovah, wilt not withhold from me thy compassion,

Thy kindness and thy faithfulness will keep me safe forever.'

⁴They only consult to thrust me out from my^a dignity.

^r40^s Certain of the MSS. and the Syr. read our God.

^s40^s Lit., eyes thou hast dug out for me. The text is doubtful and the meaning obscure. Possibly the psalmist had in mind such passages as Hos. 6^s, Jer. 7^u. ^u, and I Sam. 15^u.

^t40^t This is another obscure passage. Possibly in the original the thought is that the psalmist offers himself as a gift to Jehovah rather than the usual sacrificial offering. This line lacks the usual number of feet which prevail in this chapter, and it is very probable that it is a scribal gloss added by some one who had in mind either a copy of the book of Jeremiah or of Micah.

^u40^u An echo of Jer. 31^u. ^u.

§ 114 The didactic element in this ps. is prominent. Its practical and moral purpose is evident. It is possible that ¹⁻¹² embody the reflections of a later sage. The liturgical element and the general atmosphere of the ps. suggest the Gk. period as its date. Possibly the original nucleus, ¹⁻³, comes from the middle of the Persian period. The ps. is peculiar in that its refrain stands at the beginning of the first and second stanzas. It embodies the psalmist's message: God is the refuge of all who trust him. Selah, at the end of ⁴ and ³, marks the end of the first and second stanzas. This is a strong and original ps. It is a meditation in which the psalmist speaks to himself (O my soul).

^v62¹ A scribe has changed the original Jehovah to Elohim.

^w62¹ So ^s. Heb., my soul waiteth upon Jehovah.

^x62² Heb. adds greatly, but it is lacking in the parallel in ^s.

ⁱ62¹¹ This peculiar form of introduction is intended to render more impressive the statement which follows. Cf. Amos's introductory formula in Am. 1³. ⁶.

§ 115 This exquisite little poem is one of the ps. of ascents and is a companion to 23. It apparently comes from a period of comparative quiet. The Gk. period furnishes a satisfactory background. Like the word of Jesus in Mt. 6²⁵⁻³⁴, this ps. has a message of comfort for all bowed down by fear or affliction. Originally it was a personal ps., but ⁴ indicates that it was directed to the nation as well. Its monotheism points to a post-exilic period. The prevailing parallelism is stair-like. Apparently it was sung antiphonally. Vss. 1, 2 were chanted by the leader or the people and 3-8 by the chorus.

^j121¹ A reminiscence of the days when Jehovah was worshipped on the heights. The mountains in the psalmist's mind are apparently the symbols of the world of nature.

^k121¹ Possibly this line is to be read as a question, Shall I lift up mine eyes to the mountains? to which the answer, No, Jehovah is Lord of all creation, is implied.

^l121⁸ Possibly the original read my and in the next line me.

^m121⁸ Gk. and Lat., will keep thee.

Didactic refrain

³Let Israel hope in Jehovah from this time forth and forevermore.

§ 116 In this powerful little ps. the notes of petition and trust mingle, but the latter triumphs. Duhm says rightly, "It can hardly be called a penitential psalm." It has, for obvious reasons, occupied a prominent place in the history of the church. Its five-beat measure expresses well its deep emotion. Since it is quoted in II Chr. 6²⁹. ⁴⁰ it is probably to be dated early in the Gk. period.

• 130² Heb. adds Lord. It belongs rather with the next line.

• 130³ Again the Heb. adds Lord. Many MSS. read, however, Jah, Jehovah, indicating that the duplication is due to scribal expansion.

• 130⁴ Or with Briggs reconstructing the text with the aid of certain Gk. MSS., Syr., and Theod. so as to read that thy law may be revered.

• 130⁵ A scribe has by mistake confused this and the following line so that in the Heb. the phrase my soul waiteth is introduced here and the verb is lacking in the next line.

• 130⁶ A scribe has repeated for the morning in the Heb.

• 130⁷ A scribe has expanded the vs. by adding with Jehovah.

• 130⁷ The with him is repeated in the Heb.

§ 117 This beautiful ps. originally described a deep personal experience. The concluding vs. was added to adapt it to use by the community. Soul in this ps. represents the physical passions, the material longings, the selfish motives, which have brought under control and stilled by the poet's higher self, his spiritual ego. Through struggle he has emerged into a state of peace in which he is content to leave all the questions that have baffled him to his divine Father.

• 131¹ Lofty eyes were constantly used as a concrete figure for arrogance and pride.

• 131¹ Lit., walk about in, i. e., investigate, meddle with.

• 131² The repetition of weaned child may be due to a scribal error. The figure is clear: even as a weaned child lies quietly on its mother's breast, with no anxiety concerning its nourishment, so at last the psalmist had learned to trust implicitly in Jehovah, assured of his care.

§ 118 This is one of the most powerful hymns of the O.T. It has also suffered more in translation than any other. The VSS. present a confusing variety of variant readings. The tense in the Heb. also frequently changes so that it is not entirely clear whether the poet is portraying a past or present experience. On the whole the context favors the present tense. The poet uses the language of Dt., II Sam., Is., Mic., and Jer. He evidently has in mind earlier crises, such as that recorded in Judg. 5, when Jehovah was believed to have come from his sacred mountain in the Arabian wilderness southeast of Palestine to deliver his people. It is evident, however, that a later and even greater crisis is on the poet's mental horizon. Such passages as ¹²⁻¹⁴ find their most perfect counterpart in the earlier persecutions and victories of the Maccabean era although the poem may come from an earlier and lesser crisis. It was probably given the title, The Prayer of Habakkuk the Prophet, and appended to the writings of that pre-exilic prophet because he was the first to present the problem of doubt and the solution of faith, ²⁻⁴, which are central in the ps. The rest of the superscription, which may be translated with the aid of the Gk., On the stringed instruments, and the postscript, To the musical director. On the stringed instruments, indicate that it was interpreted as a collective ps. and was used and probably originally written for use in the temple service.

^{a32} Lit., report of thee.

^{a32} Slightly correcting the Heb., as the context requires. The scribe has here mistaken the word see for the very similar Heb. word meaning fear.

^{b34} Revising with Ward (Hab., 26) the corrupt and impossible Heb.

^{c34} This line is very doubtful. The VSS. differ. Gk., he maketh, lit., putteth.

^{d35} Lit., flame. It is a poetic designation of the plague which spread like a flame, consuming its victims.

^{e35} Lit., goeth forth at his feet.

^{f36} Following the Gk. and context in translating the Heb.

^{g36} Possibly Duhm is right in emending so as to read rocks; for this is more consistent with the context.

^{h36} So Gk. supported by context.

ⁱ³⁶ Lit., the ways of old to him. Many commentators regard this line as secondary. The VSS. differ widely.

^{j37} Correcting the Heb. with the aid of the context. A scribe had added I saw.

^{k37} Lit., land of Midian. This is the poetic way of picturing the effect of Jehovah's advance through the Arabian wilderness where dwelt the Cushites and Midianites.

THE ASSURANCE OF JEHOVAH'S PROTECTION

⁸Art thou¹ wroth, O Jehovah, with the mountains?^m

Is thine anger against the rivers,
Or thine indignation against the sea,
That thou dost ride upon thy horses,
That thou mountest thy chariots of victory,ⁿ

⁹That thy bow standeth out uncovered,
That thy quiver is filled^o with shafts?^p

Thou cleavest the earth with torrents,

¹⁰The mountains see thee and writhe,^q

The tempest of waters sweepeth by,
The great deep uttereth its voice,
The height lifteth up its hands,

¹¹The sun^r standeth still in his dwelling,

For light thine arrows go forth,
For brightness, the glittering of thy spear.

¹²In rage thou stridest over the earth,
In wrath thou tramplest the nations.

¹³Thou goest forth to help thy people,
Thou advancest^s to help thine anointed ones.
Thou crushest the head of the wicked,^t
Laying bare the foundation to the neck.

¹⁴Thou piercest his head with his spears,
As his champions^u storm out to scatter me,
As they rejoice to devour the poor secretly.

¹⁵Thou treadest the sea with thy horses,
While the mighty waters roar.^v

¹⁶I have heard, and my body trembleth,
My lips do quiver at the sound,
Rottenness entereth my bones,
Beneath me my legs^w tremble.

^{13^s} So Gk.

^{m3^s} With G. A. Smith (Bk. of Twelve, II, 155), correcting the Heb., which has rivers (repeated in the next line), and substituting the very similar Heb. word mountains demanded by ⁸.

^{n3^s} I. e., the clouds. The verb implied has been supplied in the translation.

^{o3^s} Correcting the corrupt Heb. by the aid of certain Gk. texts that are rather strongly supported by the context.

^{p3^s} The selah suggests that here a new stanza begins.

^{q3¹⁰} Ps. 77¹⁰ contains an echo of this vs., but the variations are too wide to justify its use in reconstructing radically the present text, as do Duhm and Ward.

^{r3¹¹} The Heb. adds moon, but it is evidently a scribal gloss appended by one who had in mind Josh. 10¹². ^u, for the and is lacking and the pronominal suffix at the end of the line is singular and its gender does not agree with that of the Heb. word for moon.

^{t3¹²} Supplying the verb implied by the context and required to complete the measure.

^{u3¹²} The Heb. in the latter part of the vs. is almost hopelessly corrupt. The above reading is based on certain Gk. MSS. Heb. adds out of the house of the.

^{v3¹⁴} Dividing the vs. as the metre and parallelism demand. The meaning of the rare word translated champions is doubtful.

^{w3¹⁴} The position and interpretation of this vs. are doubtful. Some commentators place it after ⁸ and others after ¹¹. In any case the Heb. word translated heap or surge is best regarded as a verb (so Gk.) and translated as in Ps. 46³.

^{x3¹⁶} Slightly emending the Heb., as the Gk. and context suggests, so that it reads, lit., steps.

FAITH TRIUMPHANT OVER DOUBT

But I will wait quietly for the day of trouble,^z

And there be no vintage on the vines,
Though the olive harvest fail,
And the fields yield no food,

I will rejoice in the God of my salvation.
¹⁹The Lord Jehovah is my strength!

The

^z 3¹⁶ Many commentators revise so as to read, I moan in view of the day of trouble, but the VSS. support the Heb. and it is simpler to regard this line as marking the transition from fear to faith.
^y 3¹⁷ So Gk. Heb., blossom, but this is apparently due to the scribal misreading of one letter.

§ 119 This ps. bears the superscription, For the musical director. For flute playing. Psalm of David. The ps. expresses the devotion and voices the needs of the righteous worshippers at the temple. The spirit is that of post-exilic Judaism. The treacherous, flattering foes are within not without the community. Their attitude toward religion is clearly expressed in Mal. 2¹⁷ and their character is laid bare in Is. 56⁹⁻¹². The psalmist speaks for those who fear Jehovah and faithfully cherish the good and abhor the evil. The date as in Pss. 3, 4 is apparently the Persian period before the advent of Nehemiah. The setting of the ps. is the temple, and it was well adapted for use as a morning prayer.

The emotional five-beat measure prevails and appropriately voices the psalmist's impassioned cry for deliverance and vindication. The ps. consists of five four-line strophes. The first is the invocation; then in the succeeding strophes the wicked and righteous are in turn contrasted, so that the strophic rhythm is in reality antithetic with a corresponding strong dramatic effect.

^a5¹ Lit., faint utterance. RV, meditation; but this does not reproduce the Heb. Cf. ⁴.

^b5² The Heb. inserts Jehovah between the verb and its modifying clause. It is probably one of the common scribal additions.

^c5³ Probably the language was suggested by the custom of preparing the morning offering for Jehovah, cf. Lev. 17. ¹², 24⁸, and then of watching to see whether or not it was accepted.

^d5⁴ The technical term for appearing at the temple for worship.

^e5⁵ The Heb. adds thou dost destroy, but this not only destroys the metre but is inappropriate between the main verbs hate and abhor.

^f5⁶ Slightly correcting the Heb.

^g5⁷ So Heb. and most of the VSS. Gk., my way before thee.

^h5⁸ This line has but three beats in the Heb. It has probably lost two words.

^{15a} Following Briggs (Pss., I, 45) in transferring the clause thou coverest him, which does not fit this context, to the next vs., where it is demanded by the sense as well as the metrical structure of the vs.

§ 120 This ps. is introduced by the superscription, To the musical director. With strong music. With the bass voice. Psalm of David. Again the psalmist voices the emotions of the afflicted but truly religious members of the community. The foes are the godless Israelites who oppress the pious. The latter are so deeply afflicted that death threatens, ⁴, ⁵. The sense of guilt also oppresses, and sorrow overwhelms them, but, like a flash of light in the midst of gloom, the assurance comes, ⁸⁻¹⁰, that Jehovah has heard their prayer and will deliver them from their foes. The obvious dependence upon Jer. and Is. 38, cf. Jer. 10^m and Is. 38¹⁸, and the quotations from it in subsequent pss. support the other evidence that it comes from the middle of the Persian period.

The three-beat measure is used. With the exception of the last stanza, which has six lines, the ps. consists of four five-line strophes. The first three strophes stand in the synon. relation to each other; but the fourth records the answer to the psalmist's petition.

^{k6} So Gk. In the Heb. a scribe has added Jehovah.

¹⁶ Lit., my bones are trembling.

^{m6} The same verb is used as in the preceding line, but the English idiom calls for a different synonym.

ⁿ⁶ Again Jehovah has been inserted in the Heb. by a scribe, destroying the metre.

^{o6} The Heb. word means either (1) remembrance of Jehovah in the ritual, or (2) remembrance of people or things, or (3) memorial of a person. The parallelism favors the first meaning. Cf. Is. 38¹⁸, ¹⁹.

CRY FOR HELP IN DISTRESS

^p6¹⁰ Omitting the first they will be disgraced, which has evidently been introduced into the first part of the vs. through a scribal repetition.

^q6¹⁰ Lit., they shall turn back, they shall be put to shame in a moment.

§ 121 This ps. is introduced by the title, Shiggaion (perhaps an impassioned ode. Cf. Hab. 3¹. 1⁹, Gk.). Psalm of David, which he sang to Jehovah because of the words of Cush, the Benjamite. No such person as Cush is referred to elsewhere in the O.T. The contents as well as the title of this ps. are unique. Vss. 1-5. 12-18 appear to refer to a certain definite experience in the life of an individual. The fortunes of David during his outlaw period, I Sam. 23-27, and the ultimate fate that overtook Saul, his pursuer, would seem to be in the mind of the poet, who probably lived about the middle of the Persian period. According to certain critics, vss. 1-5. 12-18 represent the original literary unit, but the reasons given are not conclusive.

^r7² Lit., my soul.

^s7² Following the Gk. and Syr., which supplies the none demanded by the context and metre.

^t7³ The this evidently refers to the crime charged against the speaker by the pursuing foe. The next vs. implies that the charge was the breaking of a covenant.

^u7⁴ Gk., requited him who hath done evil to me.

^v7⁴ So Syr. and Targ. and parallelism. Heb., delivered him. Ewald conjectured that two lines had here been lost.

^w7⁵ Lit., pursue my soul and overtake.

^x7⁵ Or liver, representing the seat of the feelings.

^y7⁶ Or in fury against.

^z7⁶ Heb. adds for me; so Old Lat. Gk., Jehovah my God.

^a7⁷ Slightly revising the Heb.

^b7⁸ Lit., reins, the innermost parts of man.

^c7¹⁰ Lit., shield.

^d7¹¹ Gk., strong and patient.

wicked

Ps. 10 ¹Why, O Jehovah, dost thou stand afar off,
Hiding thyself in times of distress?
²The wicked are arrogantly persecuting the afflicted,
Let them be caught by the plots they devise.
³For the wicked boasteth to his heart's desire,
And the greedy curseth^b and spurneth Jehovah.
⁴In his pride the wicked saith,ⁱ 'He doth not punish;
'There is no God,' is ever his thought.
⁵His ways are corrupt at all times,
Thine acts of judgment are far above, out of his sight,
He laugheth^j in scorn at all his adversaries;
⁶He thinketh to himself, 'I cannot be moved;
For all time to come I will not fall into misfortune.'
⁷His mouth is full of cursing^k and fraud,^l
Under his tongue is sorrow and mischief.
⁸He stayeth in the lurking-places about the villages,^m
In secret places he slayeth the innocent,
His eyes spy out the unfortunate, to slay them.ⁿ

^o713 I. e., firebrand, following the Gk. and Syr. and the context.

ⁱ714 Evidently this is used metaphorically for the wicked man.

^z717 This closing doxology is probably a liturgical addition.

§ 122 An editor, if not the original author, combined Pss. 9 and 10 into an acrostic ps. This explains the absence of a superscription in the Heb. to 10. The Gk., however, divides them, and this division is based on the fundamental fact that the two pss. deal with two distinctly different subjects. In Ps. 10 the acrostic arrangement is only dimly visible. It is a vivid description of the proud, malignant persecutors of the pious in the Jewish community in the days preceding Nehemiah's appearance.

^b103 Lit., bles; in several passages it is equivalent to curse.

^j104 Following the Gk. and Syr. and a corrected Heb. text.

^k105 Lit., puffs.

^l107 Transferring the first word of the Heb. to its original position demanded by the context, the Heb., and the acrostic structure.

^m108 The Heb. adds in oppression.

ⁿ109 Lit., lurking-place of the villages or settlements, i. e., the places on the outskirts of the outlying hamlets from which attacks were made.

^z109 So Gk. and Lat. Heb. is evidently corrupt.

PRAYER THAT JEHOVAH WILL VINDICATE HIS JUSTICE

⁹He lieth in ambush like a lion in a thicket,
 He lieth in wait to catch the afflicted,

¹¹He saith to himself, 'God hath forgotten,

¹²Arise, O Jehovah,^r lift up thy hand,

¹³Why doth the wicked condemn God,

¹⁴Thou hast seen, even thou,^t the trouble and grief,

^o 10¹⁰ Restoring the verb suggested by the acrostic structure of the ps. and the demands of the Heb. and metre. Cf. also Ps. 37²².

^p 10¹⁰ Following the marginal reading of the Heb.

^q 10¹¹ Or power. The meaning of the Heb. word is not certain.

^r 10¹² The Heb. adds God; but this makes an unusually long line and appears to have been transferred through some scribal error from the next line where it completes the parallelism and metre.

^s 10¹³ Lit., seek.

^t 10¹⁴ Jehovah is the one addressed.

^u 10¹⁵ Following the order of the Gk. and Lat.

^v 10¹⁵ The exact translation is doubtful; possibly it should be rendered, if one seeks his wickedness, he shall not find.

^w 10¹⁶ Lit., perished.

^x 10¹⁷ Slightly correcting the text so as to read thy instead of their.

^y 10¹⁸ So Gk. Heb., from the earth. The original form of this vs. is doubtful. Some read to make earth-born man ever tremble.

§ 123 This ps. is introduced by the superscription, For the musical director. For the bass voice. Psalm of David. The psalmist expresses the feeling of the faithful in the community who are suffering at the hands of the arrogant, deceitful leaders. His language is that of the post-exilic writers, and he is acquainted with the late passages in Is. Cf. ⁶ and Is. 33¹⁰. The ps. probably comes from the dark days immediately preceding the advent of Nehemiah.

The four-beat measure is used with great regularity. Also the original ps. appears to have contained four regular stanzas of four lines each. It opens with a cry for help and a lament over the prevailing insincerity, but in succeeding stanzas faith in Jehovah gains the ascendancy and, as in so many of the pss., the poet realizes that his prayer is answered.

^a 12¹ Slightly correcting the pointing of the Heb. as the context demands.

^a 12¹ Lit., have come to an end.

^b 12^e The meaning is doubtful. It may be translated in the safety for which he longs.

^c 12^e Again the Heb. is difficult. The phrases Refined silver,—seven times purified are apparently additions by a scribe acquainted with 18²⁰, 19⁸⁻¹⁰.

^d 12^e This clause is doubtful. Gk., Thou wast very angry with.

§ 124 This ps. has the simple superscription, For the chief musician. Psalm of David. The tone is distinctly individual, although the psalmist also doubtless voices the painful experience of many deeply afflicted souls who, like himself, were persecuted to the point of despair by their powerful, pitiless foes. Vs. ⁴ indicates that he is one of the pious who feel that Jehovah's honor would be endangered by their ultimate downfall. The ps. as a whole expresses the invincible faith of the true lovers of Jehovah, whose prayers constitute the basis of the Psalter. Its date is to be found in the discouraging years immediately before Nehemiah's advent.

The ps. in its final form consists of three stanzas. The first two are in the four-beat measure and stand in antithetic relation to the third stanza in which faith proclaims its victory in the quicker, prevailing three-beat measure.

^e 13ⁱ Lit., ever forget me.

^f 13ⁱ Following a text revised as the context suggests. Heb., counsels.

^g 13ⁱ So Gk. and Syr. Heb. omits and night, but this addition is supported by the metrical structure of the vs. and the implications of the context.

^h 13ⁱ This line is the antithesis of 1^b.

ⁱ 13ⁱ As in I Sam. 14²⁷, ²⁹, this idiom evidently means refresh, receive physical vigor. It is a common figure in the pss. Cf. 4⁸, 31¹⁴.

^j 13ⁱ I. e., tottering to my ruin.

^k 13ⁱ The Gk. and Lat. add, Yea, I will praise the name of the Lord Most High.

§ 125. Prayer That God Intervene for the Righteous, Ps. 17

Ps. 17 ¹Hearken, O Jehovah, to the right;¹ attend to my cry;
Listen to my prayer from lips that are free from guile.
²Let my judgment come forth from thy presence, that mine^m eyes may § 125 The author of this ps. was a protagonist of the pious. His assailants are the same class who figure in the immediately preceding ps. Like those ps., 17 is from the middle of the Persian period. It presents, however, a high ideal of piety and emphasizes purity of heart and utterance rather than ceremonial piety.

¹17¹ Lit., righteousness, possibly it stands for righteous man.

^m17² So Gk. Heb., thine.

^p17³ The Heb. joins this word to the preceding line, but the parallelism and the metre favor the above division.

^o17⁴ I. e., as in a furnace.

^q17⁵ Slightly correcting the Heb.

^r17⁶ Here again the text is corrupt and the reconstruction is doubtful. The clause as to the deeds of men, at the beginning, has no connection with the context.

^s17⁷ Lit., make wonderful.

^t17⁸ Cf. Dt. 32¹⁰, Lam. 2¹⁸.

^u17⁹ Especially the midriff. The meaning is that they are irresponsive to all feelings of pity.

^v17¹⁰ Correcting the evidently corrupt Heb. according to suggestions furnished by the VSS. and supported by the context. The vs. is difficult and doubtful.

^w17¹¹ Lit., they put their eyes to stretch out in the earth.

^x17¹² Following the Gk. The Heb. is clearly corrupt. The above translation is also strongly supported by the context. Another possible rendering of the Heb. is they are like.

^y17¹³ Heb. has sing. throughout this vs.

^z17¹⁴ Heb., from the wicked.

In thee they trusted and were not ashamed.

⁶But I indeed am a worm and no man,^f
Reproached by men^g and despised by the people.

^a 17¹⁴ Lit., their belly.

^a 17¹⁴ I. e., of judgment.

^b 17¹⁵ With RV supplying the verb beholding. Possibly this last vs. is a later addition.

§ 126 Ps. 22 is one of the most quoted ps. of the Psalter. It also quotes largely from earlier O.T. writings. Cobb, in Bk. of Pss., pp. 59-61, has indicated in parallel columns this close relationship. The majority of the quotations in the ps. are from Jer., Ezek., Lam., Job, and especially II Is. Here the servant of Jehovah speaks, as in Is. 42-53. He is, however, not the idealized servant but the exiled race, the worm, reproached by men and despised by the people,^g of Is. 41¹⁴, 49⁷, and 53³. Here the feelings of the Jewish race are laid bare in its hour of mortal anguish. Its memories, its doubts, its pains, and its hopes are set forth with a frankness and dramatic power that have arrested the attention of generations of readers. As in Is. 53, the portrait is individual and the woes of the sufferer are portrayed in superlative colors. Cf. 12-15. But the experiences here reflected are too varied to fit any one individual. Rather they picture collectively the woes that came to the community and especially to the faithful.

The date and background of the ps. are clearly the same as in Is. 40-55 and the poem of Job. It is the period of bitter persecution that followed the rebuilding of the second temple (516 B.C.) and the disappointment of the popular hopes of attaining independence under Zerubbabel. Heathen neighbors attacked the helpless Judean community, while within the cruel, rapacious leaders preyed upon those who remained faithful to Jehovah, seizing their lands, forcing their children into slavery, cf. Neh. 5, and taunting them because of their piety. The original prayer apparently ended with the petition in 20, 21 for divine deliverance. To this is appended a doxology, 22-23, in which the sufferer declares that his prayer has been answered. This appendix was evidently written in the light of the deliverance wrought by Nehemiah in rebuilding the walls of Jerusalem and in correcting the social evils. A second appendix, in the five-beat measure, 27-31, proclaims Jehovah's universal rule and voices the hope that the time was coming when all nations would worship him. This was probably suggested by Is. 52¹²-53¹² and added in the Gk. period. These appendices indicate how deep was the impression that the original ps. made upon later readers. It is not strange that the early Christian writers, searching the Scriptures for references to the work of Jesus, regarded this ps. as a detailed prediction of his shame and sufferings on the cross.

^c 22¹ This line is quoted in Mt. 27⁴⁶, Mk. 15³⁴. The repetition of my God in the Heb. is probably due to a later scribe.

^d 22¹ Heb., words of my roaring (in anguish). The metre, the context, and the allusion in 24 favor the shorter text followed above. The meaning appears to be that there is no sign of approaching deliverance in response to his cries of pain. Duhm (Psalmen, 48), by a radical revision of the text, secures a more harmonious reading: Thou remainest afar, O my help, the object of my cry, my God.

^e 22³ Transposing my God from the beginning of 2 to 3 where the metre and context require it.

^f 22⁶ Cf. Is. 41¹⁴, 53³, 49⁷.

^g 22⁶ Lit., a reproach of mankind.

CRY OF THE SUPREME SUFFERER

⁷Whoever seeth me derideth me,
They sneer^b as they toss the head:

Let him rescue him, for in him he delighteth !'

⁹Yet it was thou who took me from the womb,
Who made me safe on my mother's breast;

²¹Save me from the mouth of the lion,
In my affliction^s from the horns of the wild ox.

Appeal to God
to save

^b 22⁷ Lit., separate with the lip. If the text is correct it refers to the curling lip of scorn.
ⁱ 22⁸ Lit., he rolled, i. e., his cares. So Gk. and Lat. and a different vocalization of the Heb. This is strongly supported by the context.
^j 22¹⁰ Lit., womb. The reference in ⁹. ¹⁰ is probably to the Semitic custom by which at birth the father acknowledged and preserved the life of the child by taking it on his knee.
^k 22¹¹ Dividing this vs. as the balanced parallelism and the regular metre demand.
^l 22¹² The Heb. verb conveys the idea of waiting expectantly.
^m 22¹⁴ Lit., inwards.
ⁿ 22¹⁵ Correcting a scribal error in the Heb. as the context demands.
^o 22¹⁷^a Transferring this line as the context and poetic structure of the passage demand.
^p 22¹⁸ Cf. Is. 56¹⁰ for the same contemptuous designation of the vicious Jewish rulers.
^q 22¹⁸ Or mar. Gk. and current translation, dig through, pierce. The meaning of the Heb. verb is doubtful. Aquila and Sym. favor the reading bind or fetter, which better suits the context.
^r 22²⁰ Lit., my only one. Cf. ²¹ and 35¹⁰. I. e., my life.
^s 22²¹ The present Heb. text reads thou hast answered me; but the Gk., Sym., and Lat. suggest that this is a scribal error for the very similar Heb., my affliction.

PETITIONS FOR DELIVERANCE FROM FOES

A later
dox-
ology

²²I will declare thy name to my countrymen,
And praise thee in the midst of the congregation.
²³Oh, ye who fear Jehovah, praise him,
All the seed of Jacob, honor him,
All the offspring of Israel stand in awe of him;
²⁴For he hath^t not abhorred the affliction^u of the afflicted,
And he hath not hidden his face from me,^v
When I cried unto him he heard.
²⁵Of thee is my praise in the congregation,
In the presence of those who fear him I will pay my vows.
²⁶The afflicted shall eat and be satisfied;
Those who seek him shall give him praise,
[Saying], 'Let your heart live forever.'

§ 127. A Cry for Deliverance from Impious Persecutors, Ps. 69

Save,
O God

Ps. 69 ¹Save me, O Jehovah, for the waters are come to me;
²I sink in deep mire, where there is no standing;
I am come into deep waters, and a flood floweth over me.

³I am weary with my crying; my throat is parched;
Mine eyes fail while I wait for my God.
⁴Those hating me without cause are more than the hairs of my head;^w
My false enemies, who would cut me off, are mighty;
That which I took not away^x I must restore.
⁵O Jehovah, thou, indeed, knowest my foolishness;^y
And my faults are not hid from thee.
⁶Let not those who wait for thee, O Jehovah^z of hosts, be put to shame through me,
Let not those that seek thee, O God of Israel, be dishonored through me;

tice

⁷Because for thy sake I have borne reproach;
Insult hath covered my face.
⁸I am become a stranger to my brethren,
And an alien to my mother's children.

¹²² Heb. adds not despised. This may be the original and abhorred due to a later scribe. It is improbable that both words are original.

¹²² Many scholars would revise so as to read to answer the afflicted, in order to make the parallelism with the next line complete.

¹²² So Gk. supported by the next vs. Heb., from him.

§ 127 This ps. is the work of an early reformer in spirit akin to the author of 22 and Mal. He voices his own painful experiences and that of the pious class who found in Nehemiah their champion against the indifferent, high-priestly party. Cf. Neh. 13. The unity of the ps. has been questioned but on insufficient grounds. The metre is not as regular as in certain ps. Apparently the psalmist voiced his impassioned cry for help first in the four-beat measure, ¹⁻³. Then he concluded with the three-beat measure. It is possible that ²²⁻²⁶ were added to adapt the ps. to liturgical use. The original ps. probably comes from the days of Nehemiah and therefore from the middle of the Persian period.

⁶⁹ Syr., More numerous than my bones are those who hate me without cause. This may be original, for it preserves the perfect parallelism with the first member of the couplet.

⁶⁹ Lit., spoiled not, i. e., took by violence.

⁶⁹ It is not clear what was the nature of the psalmist's folly and sin. The vagueness suggests that this is but a general confession of sin that he may be assured of Jehovah's full favor.

⁶⁹ With Gk., omitting Lord.

DELIVERANCE FROM IMPIOUS PERSECUTORS

⁹For the zeal for thy house^a hath consumed me,
 And the reproaches of those who reproach thee have fallen on me.
¹⁰When I afflicted^b my soul with fasting,
 Even that was a reproach against me.
¹¹When I made sackcloth my clothing,
 I became a taunt song to them.
¹²They who sit in the gate talk of me,
 And I am the song^c of the drunkards.

¹³But as for me, my prayer is to thee,^d
 O Jehovah, in an acceptable time,
 O God, in the abundance of thy lovingkindness,
 Answer me in the truth of thy salvation.
¹⁴Deliver me out of the mire, that I sink not,
 Let me be delivered from mine enemies and from the deep waters.
¹⁵Let not the flood of waters^e overwhelm me,
 Let not the deep swallow me up,
 And let not the pit shut its mouth upon me.
¹⁶Answer me, O Jehovah, according to thy lovingkindness,^f
 As thy compassion is great, turn to me.
¹⁷And hide not thy face from thy servant,
 For I am in distress; answer me speedily.
¹⁸Draw nigh to my life, and redeem it;
 Ransom me because of mine enemies.

Let God
 in his goodness
 deliver

¹⁹It is thou who knowest my reproach;
 My shame and my dishonor are before thee.
²⁰Reproach hath broken my heart,
 And I am sick because of all mine adversaries;^g
 When I hoped for some to pity, there was none,
 And for comforters—I found not one.
²¹They also gave me gall for my food,
 And for my thirst they gave me vinegar to drink.

The
 pitiless foes

²²Let their table before them become a snare,
 And their peace-offerings^h become a trap.
²³Let their eyes be darkened, that they cannot see,
 And their loins be continually shaking.
²⁴Pour out thine indignation upon them,

May
 their guilt be punished

^a 69⁹ I. e., devotion to the temple and resentment at its pollution.
^b 69¹⁰ Lit., wept.
^c 69¹¹ The Heb. word describes a song sung to the accompaniment of stringed instruments.
^d 69¹³ This vs. contains an interesting example of the enveloping or introverted parallelism in which the first and fourth and the second and third lines are parallel to each other.
^e 69¹⁵ I. e., the grave and Sheol.
^f 69¹⁶ Heb., for thy lovingkindness is good, but this is probably due to scribal expansion, for it destroys the metre and perfect parallelism of the vs.
^g 69²⁰ In the Heb. the metre and parallelism have been destroyed through a scribal error. Transferring the clause all mine adversaries to the end of the line, where it probably stood originally, restores the balance and meaning of the vs.
^h 69²² So Syr. The Heb. as it stands is unintelligible.

PETITIONS FOR DELIVERANCE FROM FOES

And let the fierceness of thine anger overtake them.

²⁵Let their habitation¹ become utterly desolate;

Let none be dwelling in their tents.

²⁶For they pursue him whom thou hast smitten,

And they tell of the sorrow of him¹ whom thou hast wounded.

²⁷Add iniquity to their iniquity,

And let them not come into thy righteousness;^k

²⁸Let them be blotted out of the book of the living,¹

And let them not be inscribed with the righteous.

²⁹But I indeed am poor and sorrowful;

Let thy salvation, O God, set me on high.

³⁰I will praise God's name with a song,

And will magnify it with a hymn of thanksgiving;

³¹And it will please Jehovah better than an ox,^m

Or a bullock that hath horns and hoofs.

³²See it, ye afflicted, and be glad;ⁿ

Ye who seek after God, let your heart live.

³³For Jehovah heareth the needy,

And despiseth not prisoners who suffer for him.^o

³⁴Let heaven and earth praise him,

The seas, and everything that glideth therein.

³⁵For God will deliver Zion,

And rebuild the cities of Judah;

And they shall abide there, and possess it.

³⁶The seed also of his servants shall inherit it,

And they who love his name shall dwell in it.

§ 128. A Cry for Speedy Deliverance, Ps. 31¹⁻⁸

Ps. 31 ¹In thee, O Jehovah, I seek refuge;

Let me never be put to shame.

In thy righteousness deliver and save^p me.

²Incline thine ear unto me,

Save me quickly, O Jehovah,

Be thou to me a strong rock,

¹69²⁵ Lit., encampment.

¹69²⁸ So one Heb. MS. and Targ. Heb., those.

^k69²⁷ I. e., may they bear the consequences of their guilt and not enjoy Jehovah's pardon and purification.

¹69²⁸ Cf. Mal. 3¹⁴.

^m69³¹ Here song service and the individual feeling that it expressed is placed above sacrificial offerings.

ⁿ69³² Slightly revising the Heb. as the context demands.

^o69³³ Lit., his prisoners.

§ 128 Cobb finds in Ps. 31 three distinct units, 1-3, 4-12, and 13-14. In 1-3 the note is calmer and the three-beat measure prevails; in 4-12 the five-beat measure. Vss. 4-12 appear to be a unit, the second half introducing the note of trust and hope that characterizes the majority of the ps. of this group. Both ps. contain many quotations from the earlier prophets, and they probably come from the first half or middle of the Persian period.

^p31¹ So Gk. supported by the metre. Heb. has lost the second verb.

CRY FOR SPEEDY DELIVERANCE

A house of defence to deliver me;
³For thou art my rock and my fortress,
 And for the sake of thy name, O Jehovah,⁴
 Be gracious to me and guide me.
⁶Bring me out of the net they have hid for me;
 For thou, indeed, art my stronghold.

⁵Into thy hand I commit my spirit;
 Thou hast ransomed me, O Jehovah, God of faithfulness.
⁷Thou hatest^r those who regard false idols,⁸
 But I look in trust to Jehovah.
⁷I will be glad and rejoice in thy kindness,
 Thou who hast seen mine affliction.
 Thou didst know that my life was in peril;
⁸And thou hast not shut me up in mine enemy's hands,
 Thou hast set my feet in a broad place.

Ps. 31 ⁹Be gracious to me, O Jehovah, for I am in distress;
 Mine eye is consumed with grief, my soul and body;⁴
¹⁰For my life is consumed with sorrow and my years with sighing;
 My strength faileth because of mine affliction^u and my bones waste away.
¹¹With all my adversaries I am become a reproach, and a horror to mine

 And I am a terror to mine acquaintances, those who see me on the street flee from me.
¹²I am forgotten as a dead man out of mind, I am like a broken^w vessel;

 § 129 Cf. introd. note to § 128.
^{31¹²} Possibly the last two words in this line have been corrupted in transmission.
^{31¹³} Following the Gk. and Syr. and the demands of the context.
^{31¹⁴} Slightly correcting the Heb., which reads exceedingly and makes no sense.
^{31¹⁵} Or lost.
^{31¹⁶} I. e., threats.
^{31¹⁷} Heb. adds I said. But this is not supported by the metre and detracts rather than adds to the line.
^{31¹⁸} A scribe has introduced the following note which lacks the regular metre of the preceding and following lines and interrupts the sequence of thought by introducing an alien thought:
Let me not be ashamed, O Jehovah, for I have called unto thee; let the wicked be ashamed, let them be silent in Sheol; let the lying lips be put to silence which speak insolence against the righteous proudly and contemptuously.

PETITIONS FOR DELIVERANCE FROM FOES

Jehovah's goodness to his people ¹⁹O how great is thy goodness which thou hast laid up for those who fear thee,
Which thou hast done before the sons of men for those who trust thee!
²⁰Thou hidest them in the secret of thy presence from the plots of men,
Thou keepest them secretly in a shelter away from the strife of tongues.

Thanksgiving ²¹Blessed is Jehovah, for he hath showed me his marvellous kindness;^a ²²For I, indeed, said in my haste, I have been cut off from thy presence.
Nevertheless thou heardest the voice of my supplications when I cried to thee.
²³Love Jehovah,^b all ye his saints; Jehovah keepeth faithfulness,^c
And requiteth to the uttermost the one who acteth proudly.
²⁴Be strong and let your mind take courage, all who wait for Jehovah.

§ 130. Prayer for Deliverance from Powerful Foes, Ps. 54

The need of help Ps. 54 ¹Help me, O Jehovah, by thy name,
And by thy might execute judgment for me.
²O Jehovah hear my prayer,
Give ear to the words of my mouth.
³For proud ones^d have risen up against me,
And terrible ones have sought my life;
They have not set Jehovah before their eyes.^e

The deliverance desired ⁴Lo, Jehovah, my helper!
The Lord, upholder of my life!
⁵May calamity come back upon my foes;
In thy faithfulness cut them off.
⁶Willingly would I offer thee sacrifice;
Thy name^f would I praise, for it is good,
⁷When from all trouble thou hadst delivered me,
And mine eyes had looked on mine enemy.

§ 131. Petition for Deliverance from Treacherous Foes, Ps. 55

Victim of persecution Ps. 55 ¹Give ear to my prayer, O Jehovah, and hide not from my supplication.
²Give heed to me and answer me, I am distracted^g by my complaint, ^a31²¹ The Heb. adds in a strong city. Possibly this is a corruption for in the time of distress. But the clause destroys the metrical symmetry of the vs. and in all probability was added by a scribe, who had in mind Ps. 60⁹.

^b31²² This and the following vs. may be a refrain added by a later editor who desired to adapt the ps. to liturgical uses.

^c31²³ Or Jehovah preserveth the faithful.

§ 130 It is not entirely clear whether the foe in the mind of the psalmist is an individual or a national oppressor. The personal note, however, is strong and the ps. is closely akin to many which come from the first half of the Persian period.

^d54³ So certain Heb. MSS. and Targ. Trad. Heb., strangers, following a different punctuation of the text.

^e54³ Possibly this line is secondary.

^f54⁶ Heb. adds Jehovah.

§ 131 Vss. ⁹⁻¹⁴ strongly suggest that the psalmist's foes are definite individuals, not hostile peoples, and that this is a personal prayer expressing the feelings of his class. His longing to fly away from all the treachery and turmoil of the city is pathetic. The reference to the walls in ¹⁰ points, on the whole, to the middle of the Persian period or later.

^g55² Lit., I am restless.

DELIVERANCE FROM POWERFUL FOES

³And I moan because of the voice of the enemy, the oppression^b of the wicked;

For upon me they cast iniquity, and in anger they attack me.

⁴My heart throbbethⁱ in my bosom, and the death anguish^j overtaketh me.

⁵Fear and trembling are come upon me, and horror overwhelmeth me.

⁶And I say, 'Had I but wings like a dove, I would fly away and be at rest;'

⁷Lo, then would I wander far off, I would lodge in the wilderness;

⁸I would haste to my place of refuge, to a shelter from the stormy wind.^k ⁱ 55⁴ Lit., writhes.

^j 55⁴ Lit., terrors of death.

^k 55⁸ Heb. adds, probably as the result of dittography, tempest. The absence of the connective reveals its secondary origin.

^l 55⁹ Following Targ. in supplying their counsel, required to complete the line.

^m 55¹⁴ Heb. adds with the throng, but this destroys the symmetry of the line and is probably a scribal expansion.

ⁿ 55¹⁵ Suddenly the poet is enraged at the perfidy of his friend and calls down a malediction upon him. The reason of his hot anger is given in ²⁰. ²¹, but a later scribe, familiar with the story of Korah in Nu. 16²³, has added, for evils are in their dwellings. Under the influence of this gloss the number suddenly changes from singular to plural in the Heb.

^o 55^{20, 21} Evidently these lines have been displaced, for they make no sense in their present position. Transferred to a place after ¹⁸, they supply the contrast demanded by the context.

^p 55¹⁸ This line is doubtful and may be secondary. It supplies, however, the antecedent required in ¹⁹ and its present form may simply be due to scribal errors.

^q 55¹⁹ To this vs. in the Heb. is appended what is probably a scribal note, who have no changes and who fear not God.

 They have dug a pit before me, but they have fallen therein.

§ 133. Prayer for Preservation from Secret Enemies, Ps. 64

Cry for help

Ps. 64 ¹Hear my voice, O Jehovah, in my plaint,
 Save my life from dread of the foe.
²Hide me from the council of evil-doers,
 From the throng of the workers of iniquity,
³Who whet their tongue like a sword,
 Like an arrow they fit a bitter speech,
⁴That they may shoot in concealment at the perfect;
 They shoot at him suddenly and fear not.
⁵They encourage themselves in an evil purpose,
 They confer about laying snares,
 They say to themselves, 'Who will see?'
⁶Let them search after iniquity; we are innocent;
 Even though the search be very thorough,^x
 Man's heart and mind is unfathomable.'

^r 55²² This vs. belongs more properly at the end of this much-disarranged ps., for ²² is the natural sequel to ¹⁹.

§ 132 The petitioner is apparently an individual and his foes the rapacious rulers whose cruelty during the middle of the Persian period inspired many of these impassioned cries for divine intervention. A scribal editor has attributed it to David and connected it with the time when he fled from Saul in the cave. To this prayer has been added a song of thanksgiving, ¹ 7-12, which appears again in 108¹⁻³.

^a 57¹ Lit., my soul.

^t 57³ Supplying a letter required by the context. Possibly the original read from the hand of.

^u 57³ Restoring a word which a later scribe mistook for selah.

^v 57⁴ Lit., those who consume the sons of men.

^w 57⁶ Some commentators would revise so as to make the parallelism complete with the last line, their own soul is caught.

§ 133 Again the pitiable fate of the righteous but sadly persecuted class in the Judean community is voiced in song. Probably the ps., like others of this class, comes from the middle of the Persian period.

^x 64⁶ This vs. is exceedingly doubtful. The VSS. and commentators differ widely. The above translation assumes that ⁶ continues the speech of the plotters. It voices the criminal's attitude toward his crime.

^y 64⁷ Lit., their blows.

^a 64⁸ Restoring the text as the context requires.

§ 134 Like the other acrostic ps., this is a mosaic without close logical connection or climax. It draws largely from Job, II Is., and Ex. 33, 34, but there is much that is original in the ps. The didactic purpose is obvious and it probably comes from the latter part of the Persian or from the Gk. period.

^a 25¹ The second line in the first couplet has been lost, except that the words O my God have been preserved.

^b 25² Or without effect, lit., in vain.

^c 25³ So Gk. Heb. has lost the initial letter required by the acrostic structure of the chapter.

^d 25^{7b} Through a scribal error this line has been transferred to the seventh vs., with the result that it contains three instead of two lines. Restored as above, it completes the defective couplet and is in perfect keeping with the following context.

^e 25⁶ As a result of the scribal errors in the present context, thy lovingkindness has been repeated from ^{7b}. At its present position at the end of ^{6a} it destroys the regular metrical symmetry of the vs.

^f 25^{7a} So Syr. Heb. adds my transgressions.

^g 25⁸ Heb. adds therefore.

While I lift up my hands, O Jehovah,^q toward thy holy shrine.

^b25¹⁰ Heb., all the ways of Jehovah. But the metre of the vs. strongly suggests that this was a scribal expansion from the original which read all his ways.

ⁱ25¹¹ Slightly correcting the Heb. as the context requires.

^j25¹⁴ I. e., the reverential attitude is necessary for insight and understanding of the divine purpose and for the establishment of the intimate bond between him and the individual.

^k25¹⁷ Dividing the Heb. letters as the context requires.

^l25¹⁸ Supplying the verb required by the acrostic structure of the chapter. A scribe, by mistake, has repeated at the beginning of ¹⁸ the initial word of ¹⁹.

^m25²¹ So Gk. Heb. omits O Jehovah. A later editor has added, in order to adapt the ps. to liturgical use, Redeem Israel, O God, out of all his troubles.

§ 135 There are many points of contact between this ps. and 15, 24³⁻⁶, and Dt. 26¹⁻¹¹. It was written in a time of quiet and reveals an intense interest in the ritual. It is probable that its author was a Levite and that he lived late in the Persian period or else soon after the conquests of Alexander.

ⁿ28¹ Omitting Jehovah, which is not supported by the metre or the context.

^o28¹ I. e., die.

^p28² Gk., Jehovah hath heard.

^q28² Inserting Jehovah as the metre demands.

^s28⁴ A scribe has added the following explanatory note, based on Is. 5¹³ and Jer. 24⁶, and 45⁴, For they do not appreciate the deeds of Jehovah, and the works of his hands; he will destroy them and not build them up.

^t28⁵ So Targ. and Gk. and the requirements of the context.

^w28⁶ So Gk., Syr., and certain MSS. This is clearly the original reading as indicated by the following vs. From the parallelism and the context it is clear that Jehovah's anointed was the messianic nation. A later scribe, however, who regarded the Anointed One as the promised messianic king, changed for his people to for him in the first part of the vs. The passage in its original form is richly suggestive of the sense in which the term Messiah or Anointed was frequently used by the psalmist.

§ 136 Although joined to another ps., it is evident that this fervent prayer was once entirely independent, for it appears as Ps. 70 in a later collection. Its historical background was evidently a time of persecution.

^v40¹³ Heb. adds, repetitiously, Jehovah.

^w40¹⁴ So Ps. 70³. Heb. adds to destroy it.

^x40¹⁵ So the parallel in Ps. 70³. Heb. adds to me.

^y40¹⁶ This line in the Heb. is overfull. Probably the verb say was added from the parallel in 70⁴.

^a40¹⁷ The parallel, Ps. 70⁴, has God, which evidently stood for an original Jehovah. This is clearly supported by the parallelism of the next line.

§ 137 This ps. is the prayer of an old man beset by foes. He was familiar with Dt., II Is., and many of the earlier ps., as his many quotations indicate. Vss. 1-3 are quoted from 31¹⁻³ with slight scribal variations. The dependence on these comparatively late writings and the lack of close literary unity suggest that the ps. comes from the Gk. period.

^p 71²¹ So Gk.

^a 71²² Heb. adds thee.

^r 71²² Heb. adds O my God at the end of the first line and O Holy One of Israel at the end of the second. Both destroy the metre and are probably scribal expansions.

^u 71²⁴ Conjecturally correcting the obviously corrupt Heb.

§ 138 This intense, passionate ps. was apparently written when apostates like the high priests Menelaus and Jason were in the ascendancy. The reference to the tents of Kedar in ⁵ is apparently to be interpreted figuratively. According to Gen. 25¹⁸ Kedar was the second son of Ishmael. The poet likens his treacherous, quarrelsome foes to the Ishmaelites, one of Israel's earliest and most hated rivals.

^v 120¹ Transferring Jehovah from the first part of the next vs., where it is superfluous, to ¹, where it completes the measure.

^w 120⁶ This line evidently contains the psalmist's answer to the question propounded in ². Charcoal of the broom-scrub is still widely used in the East because of the glowing heat which it furnishes.

^x 120⁶ Supplying the bow, required to complete the line, and repeating the woe is me required to complete the next line.

^y 120⁶ So eight Heb. MSS., Gk., Lat., and Syr.

^y 140⁵ Gk., for my feet. The for me is not found in the Heb.

ⁱ 140¹⁴ Lit., a man of tongue, one who uses his tongue deceitfully.

^j 140¹⁵ Heb. adds a doubtful explanatory clause usually interpreted until he be overthrown.

It is exceedingly probable that the last three vs. are scribal additions, for they depart from the prevailing measure of the vs. and introduce general statements loosely connected with the passionate theme of the ps.

§ 140 Unfortunately the text of this ps. is exceedingly uncertain. Like several of the other Maccabean ps., it has been overlaid with later glosses. Thus in ⁸ is found the incongruous but pious utterance, Should a righteous man smite me and reprove me, it were a kindness. In ⁹ also we find the sentence, having no connection with its context, and they hear my words, for they are pleasant. Many reconstructions have been suggested, but, removing these obvious glosses, the thought and unity of the ps. become reasonably clear.

^j141² Or, interpreting the Heb. word as a verb, keep.

^k141⁵ So Gk. and Syr., supported by the context, the meaning being let me not receive the hospitality of the wicked, which included pouring oil upon the heads of guests. It is closely parallel in thought to the last line of ⁴.

^l141⁸ Slightly revising the Heb., which is obviously corrupt.

^m141⁷ Following Briggs (Pss., II, 509).

ⁿ141⁸ Heb. adds Jehovah, and certain Heb. MSS. have the variant reading God, suggesting that both are secondary.

^o149⁸ Slightly revising the Heb.

^p141⁹ Following the Gk. in correcting a scribal error.

^q141¹⁰ Following a suggestion of the Gk. in slightly revising the difficult Heb.

§ 141 This vigorous, impassioned ps. was originally individual rather than national. Vss. ⁶ and ⁷ imply that the author was in prison and deserted by his friends. He regards his vindication as the vindication of the cause of the righteous, whom he prominently represents. The data are not sufficient to determine the exact period from which this ps. comes. It fits well in the mouth of the high priest Onias III, who was betrayed by his associates and driven into exile during the closing years of the Gk. period.

^r142¹ Jehovah is apparently here addressed. Some commentators would interpret the verb in the first person, but there is no basis in the Heb.

Because in thy sight no man who liveth can be justified.

³The^v enemy pursueth my life, he stampeth me^w to earth;

He compelleth me to dwell in darkness, like those who have been long dead.

⁴My spirit within me^x fainteth, and my mind is numb.

⁵I remember the days of old, I meditate on all thy works,

I muse on the works^y of thy hands; ⁶I spread them forth to thee.

Like a land that is parched, my soul thirsteth^z for thee.

guide

⁷Answer me quickly, O Jehovah; my spirit is failing;

Hide not thy face from me, lest I be like those who go down to the grave.

⁸Make me early hear of thy lovingkindness, for in thee do I trust;

Show me the way in which I should walk, for unto thee is my longing.

⁹Deliver me, O Jehovah, from mine enemies, for unto thee do I flee.^a ¹⁰Teach me to do thy will, for thou art my God;

' May thy gracious spirit ever lead me in a way^b that is straight.

^a142^a In this and the following vs. the intensity of the psalmist's thought leads him to fall into the strenuous two-beat measure.

^b142^b Slightly revising the Heb., which reads in me.

§ 142 This ps. is a mosaic of phrases and vs. taken from Lam., II Is., and especially from earlier ps. Like many of the ps. of this type, it was probably originally personal but was well adapted to express the feelings of the faithful in the Judean community during the latter part of the Gk. and the beginning of the Maccabean periods.

^w143^w Lit., thy servant.

^x143^x Heb. begins the sentence with for.

^y143^y Lit., my life.

^z143^z Heb. adds in my midst.

^a143^a So VSS. Heb., deed.

^b143^b Adding the verb required by the context.

^c143^c So one Heb. MS. The readings of the VSS. vary.

^d143^d Revising the traditional Heb. with the aid of certain Heb. MSS.

PRAYER FOR SPEEDY HELP

¹¹For thy name's sake, O Jehovah, revive me,^o bring me out of trouble;
¹²In thy lovingkindness cut off my foes, and destroy all mine opposers;
 For I am thy servant.

§ 143. Jehovah the Warrior's Stay, Ps. 144¹⁻¹¹

Ps. 144 ¹Blessed be Jehovah my Rock,

⁶Flash forth the lightning and scatter them,
 Send forth thine arrows and terrify them.
⁷Stretch forth thy hand from on high,
 Pluck me forth from the mighty waters,
 Deliver^h me from the hand of foreigners,
⁸Whose mouth doth speak deceit,
 Whose right hand is a right hand of falsehood.

May

 Whose mouth doth speak deceit,
 And whose right hand is a right hand of falsehood.

Their tribute
praise

^o 143¹¹ Omitting in thy righteousness, which is not found in the Gk. and is not supported by the context.

§ 143 This ps., like the preceding, is a composite of lines taken from Pss. 8, 33, 104, and especially from 18. The metrical symmetry of the ps. and the close logical connection between the first and second stanzas are interrupted by the insertion of 8²:

*What is man, that thou art mindful of him?
 The son of man, that thou considerest him?*

and another vs. taken from 39⁴. ⁵. The warlike spirit that breathes through this ps. is clearly that of the Maccabean era.

^d 144¹ Supplying the connective required to complete the measure.

^e 144² So four Heb. MSS. Trad. Heb. adds to me.

^f 144² So certain Heb. MSS. Lat., Syr., and Targ. Heb., my people.

^g 144⁵ So two Heb. MSS., Syr., and Targ. Heb., thy heavens.

^h 144⁷ A scribe, by mistake, has transferred this verb to the middle of the vs.

ⁱ 144⁹ Omitting God, which destroys the measure of the vs. and from its position is, without reasonable doubt, a later addition.

^j 144¹⁰ A scribe has added David.

^k 144¹⁰ A scribe, influenced by the reading in ⁷, has added here the verb pluck me forth.

PETITIONS FOR DELIVERANCE FROM HEATHEN OPPRESSORS

Pss. 44, 59, 60, 74, 79, 80

§ 144. Prayer for Deliverance from Powerful Foes, Ps. 44

Jehovah's deliverances of his people in the past

Ps. 44 ¹O Jehovah,^a with our ears have we heard,
And our fathers have recounted to us
The work which thou didst do in their days,
Thy signs^b in the days of old:
²Nations thou didst dispossess^c and plant them,
Peoples thou didst afflict and spread abroad,^d
³For by their sword they did not possess the land,
Nor did their own arm give them the victory;
But it was thy right hand and thy arm,
And with the light of thy face didst thou favor them.

Jehovah, Israel's only salvation

⁴It is thou who art my king,
Commanding^e the salvation of Jacob.
⁵Through thee we thrust down our foes,
In thy name we tread down our opponents,
⁶For not in my bow do I trust,^f
And my sword doth not deliver me.
⁷But thou hast saved us from our adversaries,
And thou hast put to shame those who hate us.
⁸In Jehovah have we boasted continually,
And praised thy name forever.

Petitions for Deliverance from Heathen Oppressors.—The ps. of this group are all national and the foes described are outside the Jewish community. Most of them come from the days of the Maccabean struggle.

§ 144 This ps. is closely related to Ps. 22 and is full of echoes of II Is. Cf., e. g., ²² We are accounted as sheep for the slaughter. The woes recounted are very similar to those described in Lam. 5. The note of faith and hope, however, is much stronger. The psalmist is clearly speaking in behalf of the community, for he frequently passes from the sing. to the plural, e. g., ⁵ 7-10, 12, 14. In ¹³ he speaks of thy people in the same way as he refers to us in the next vs. The abrupt transitions from the first sing. and plural and then to the third person is one of the peculiarities of the ps. It is a good example of a collective national ps. Its date is evidently the earlier half of the Persian period. Pathetic, indeed, in this setting is the impassioned cry in the concluding stanza, ²²⁻²³, which presents a dramatic contrast to the recital of Jehovah's acts of deliverance for his people in the past.

^a44¹ Heb., God. The original reading Jehovah, which a later editor has changed throughout these ps. to God, has been restored in the above translation.

^b44¹ This line is evidently corrupt. The present reading, Thou, thy hand, is unintelligible. A slight change in the Heb. letters, however, gives the above rendering, which is in harmony with the context. The initial word of ² also belongs to the close of ¹.

^c44² The reference in this vs. seems to be to the period of the Judges, when Jehovah dispossessed the older Canaanite peoples in order that the chosen people might inhabit the land. Cf. Am. 2⁹.

^d44³ Correcting the Heb. in accordance with the demands of the context. This interpretation of ³ is strongly supported by ².

^e44⁴ Dividing the Heb. letters differently from the accepted text and as suggested by Gk. A and Syr. Heb., God of the commandment.

^f44⁵ Vss. 6-8 may be secondary, for they simply expand in the first person the thought of ³.

DELIVERANCE FROM POWERFUL FOES

⁹But thou hast cast off^a and put us to shame,
 And goest not forth with our hosts.
¹⁰Thou^b makest us turn back from our adversary,
 And our haters rob us at will.
¹¹Thou hast given us up as sheep to be devoured,
 And thou hast scattered us among the nations.
¹²Thou sellest thy people for nought,ⁱ
 And hast not enriched thyself by their sale.
¹³Thou makest us a reproach to our neighbors,
 To be mocked and derided by those about us.
¹⁴Thou hast made us a byword among the nations,
 A shaking of the head among the peoples.
¹⁵My confusion is before me all the day long,
 And shame doth cover my face,^j
¹⁶At the voice of him who reproacheth and revileth,
 Because of the presence of the enemy and the avenger.

Present

¹⁷Though all this^k hath come upon us, we have not forgotten thee,
 Neither have we falsely broken^l thy covenant.
¹⁸Our heart hath not turned backward,
 And our steps have not turned aside from thy path,
¹⁹Though thou hast crushed us down in the place of jackals,^m
 And with deep darkness thou hast covered us over.
²⁰Had we ever forgotten the name of our God,
 Or spread forth our hands to an alien god,
²¹Would not Jehovah have searched this out?
 For he knoweth the secrets of the heart.
²²For thy sake we are slain all the day long,ⁿ
 We are accounted as sheep for the slaughter.

^{a44} Certain Gk. MSS. and Syr. add the pronominal suffix us.
^{b44} Possibly, following certain MSS., God or Jehovah should here be added.
ⁱ⁴⁴ Lit., for no wealth. The thought is that Jehovah had delivered the people into the hands of the foes without seeming reason or compensation.
^{j44} Lit., shame of my face doth cover me.
^{k44} I. e., the calamity and disgrace that has overtaken the community.
^{l44} Lit., dealt falsely with.
^{m44} I. e., the wilderness where jackals howl.
ⁿ⁴⁴ I. e., our life is one prolonged tragedy.
^{o44} I. e., hangs on the verge of the grave.
^{p44} The peril and distress of the poet is effectively expressed by the two-beat measure.
 The words are an echo of the ancient war-cry uttered when the Hebrews took up the ark, Nu. 10³⁵.

PETITIONS FOR DELIVERANCE FROM THE HEATHEN

§ 145. Prayer for Deliverance from Pitiless Enemies, Ps. 59

Arise,
O Jehovah,
deliver
and punish

Ps. 59 ¹Deliver me, O my God, from mine enemies,
Set me on high from mine assailants.
²Deliver me from the workers of iniquity,
And save me from men of blood.
³For, lo, they lie in wait for my life,
The mighty band together against me,
Not because of my transgression or my sin,
⁴O Jehovah, it is not because of mine iniquity
That they run up and take their stand against me.^a Arouse thyself to meet me, and see,
⁵Even thou, Jehovah, God of Israel,^r
Arise to visit all the nations.
Be not merciful to any treacherous troublers.

The
contrast

tween our foes
and thee,
O Je-
hovah

⁶They snarl continually like a dog,
They prowl about the city in the evening.^a ⁷Behold, they belch out with their mouth;
Yea, swords^t are in their lips;
For who, they think, is hearing?
⁸But thou, O Jehovah, laughest at them;
Thou wilt have all the nations in derision.
⁹To thee, O my strength,^u do I sing praise,
For thou, O Jehovah, art my high tower.

Speedily consume them

¹⁰May my God, with his lovingkindness, come to meet me;
May Jehovah let me look upon mine enemies.
¹¹Spare them not,^v lest my people forget;
Scatter them, hurl them down by thy power,
O Lord, our Shield and Deliverer!^w
¹²Their every word^x is the sin of their mouth,
Therefore let them be taken in their pride,
And for the curses and lies which they utter.
¹³Consume them^y in thy wrath, that they be no more,

§ 145 Vss. 5-11 strongly suggest that this ps. voices the woes of the Judean community, probably in the days before Nehemiah, and that the foes are the neighboring heathen nations that taunted and beset the defenceless Jews. A late editor associated it with the time when Saul sent men and they watched the house to kill David, I Sam. 19⁸⁻¹⁷.

^a 59⁴ These are military terms describing an armed attack.

^r 59⁸ Heb. has both God of hosts and God of Israel. Inasmuch as God of hosts is incorrectly written, it is probable that this is the later scribal addition.

^u 59⁹ Following Briggs (Pss., II, 52) in transferring the phrase in the evening to the second line, as the thought and metre require. So in ¹⁴.

^t 59⁷ Or reproaches.

^w 59⁹ Restoring the corrupt Heb. (which makes no sense) by the aid of the VSS. and the parallel in ¹⁷.

^v 59¹¹ Correcting the trad. Heb., which reads slay not, contradicting ¹³.

^x 59¹² Supplying and Deliverer, required to complete the measure.

^y 59¹³ Lit., the word of their lips. The meaning is not certain. The idea is, apparently, that their every word is their condemnation.

^z 59¹³ Following a probable reconstruction. Heb. repeats consume.

DELIVERANCE FROM PITILESS ENEMIES

And let men know that Jehovah ruleth,^a
Even to the ends of the earth.

¹⁴They snarl continually like a dog,
In the evening they prowl about the city.
¹⁵They range up and down for food,
And tarry all night if they be not satisfied.
¹⁶As for me, I will sing of thy strength;
Every morning will I praise thy lovingkindness,
Because thou art my high tower,
And a refuge in the day of my distress.
¹⁷To thee, O my strength, do I sing praises;
For thou, O Jehovah, art my high tower.^a

§ 146. Prayer for Victory in the Presence of Defeat, Ps. 60

Ps. 60 ¹Jehovah, thou hast rejected us, thou hast broken us;
Thou hast been angry; oh restore us again!^b
²Thou hast made the land to tremble, thou hast rent it;
Heal its breaches, for it shaketh.
³Thou hast made thy people see hardship,
Thou hast made us drink staggering wine,

⁴Thou hast given a banner^c to those who fear thee,
Whereunto they may flee from the bow.
⁵In order that thy beloved may be delivered,
Save us with thy right hand and answer us.^d

⁶God hath spoken in his sanctuary:
'I will exult, I will divide Shechem,
And the valley of Succoth will I mete out.
⁷Gilead and Manasseh are mine,^e
Ephraim also is the defence of my head,
Judah is my commander's staff,

Fate of Jehovah's people

Deliver

the past

Redeem thy promises

^a 59¹² A scribe has added, contradicting the broad statement of the next line, in Jacob.

^b 59¹⁷ So ⁹. A scribe has added, destroying the measure, the unusual phrase God of my lovingkindness.

§ 146 The date of this ps. is not clear although it evidently describes a definite situation. This may have been the destruction of Jerusalem, but the implication is that it was simply a great defeat from which the people hoped to recover. The invincible, warlike spirit points either to the pre-exilic or Maccabean age. The reference in ⁶ to Shechem implies that the Samaritan schism had taken place. Judah alone is Jehovah's chosen land. On the basis of the reference in ^{3a}, a later editor has added an elaborate superscription connecting this ps. with David's victory over the Edomites recorded in II Sam. 8^{12, 14}. The editor had in mind a tradition akin to that in I Chr. 18^{12, 13}, for he speaks of Joab as the conqueror. The literary points of contact between this ps. and 44 are close. Its warlike, dauntless ambition in the presence of defeat finds its best historical setting in the days of Judas Maccabeus. Vss. ⁶⁻¹² are quoted in 108⁶⁻¹² and combined with 60⁶⁻¹². The oracle in ⁶⁻⁹ may be older than the present ps. but the evidence is indecisive.

^b 60¹ Or thou didst turn us back.

^c 60⁴ The meaning is not entirely clear, but probably the banner is the assurance that Jehovah will deliver his faithful one from the attacks (bow) of their foes. Vs. ⁵ contains the natural demand that he now redeem his ancient promises.

^d 60⁵ So variant Heb. readings. Trad. Heb., me.

^e 60⁷ Lit., Gilead is mine and Manasseh is mine.

PETITIONS FOR DELIVERANCE FROM THE HEATHEN

⁸Moab is my washpot,

Ps. 74 ¹O God, why dost thou cast us off forever,

²Remember thy congregation which thou didst get of old,
The tribe of thine inheritance which thou hast redeemed.
This mount Zion, wherein thou hast dwelt.¹

³Direct thy footsteps^k to the perpetual desolations,
All the evil that the enemy hath wrought in the sanctuary.
⁴Thine adversaries roar in the midst of thy place of assembly;
There^l they set up their standards for signs.

^{160⁸} So the parallel in 108¹⁰ and Syr. and Targ.

^{160⁹} Cf. the parallel in 108¹¹. The fortified city was probably Petra, the well-nigh impregnable capital of Edom.

^{160⁹} Slightly revising the corrupt Heb.

^{160¹⁰} So Sym. and Syr. Heb. adds God.

§ 147 This ps. is conspicuous for its passionate feeling, its intense patriotism, and its strong faith. In 12-17 it not only reflects the thought but rises to the majestic height of the book of Job. The reference in the opening vs. to the sheep of thy pasture reveals an intimate familiarity with Ps. 23. The same figure is used in Enoch to describe the scattered Jews who were persecuted under Antiochus Epiphanes for their fidelity to the faith of their fathers. The ps. bears all the distinctive marks of the Maccabean period. It is a vivid, pathetic description of the calamities which overtook the Jews and especially the temple during the persecutions of Antiochus Epiphanes. As Cobb says (Bk. of Pss., 200), This psalm has the value of a historical document which may be used to confirm the story of I Mac. 4, II Mac. 8, and not merely to illustrate it. The description of the defacement and destruction of the temple by the emissaries of Antiochus Epiphanes in 4-7 is closely parallel to the description in I Mac. 1⁵⁴, ⁵⁹, and especially in 4³⁸, which states that when the Jews went to rededicate the temple they saw the sanctuary laid desolate, the altar profaned, the gates burnt, and shrubs growing in the court, as in a forest or as on one of the mountains, and the priests' chambers pulled down. The reference in 8 to the destruction of the synagogues in the land also points to a comparatively late period. The same is true of the statement in 9 that the prophets had disappeared. The reference is closely parallel to that in I Mac. 4⁴⁶, which states that they laid aside the defiled stones of the altar until there should come a prophet to give an oracle concerning them. The question in 10 of how long is precisely the same as that which is dealt with concretely in Dan. 7, which comes from the midst of the same strenuous crisis. Vs. 8 voices the policy of Antiochus Epiphanes and 10 describes vividly the attitude of the heathen foes who encircled the Jews. The tendency revealed in 12 and 13 to look back to the past and draw from it inspiration for the present is another marked characteristic of the Maccabean period. The ps. was clearly written after 168 and before the rededication of the temple in 165 B.C. The evidence points to a date shortly before 165. The ps., therefore, probably comes from the same year as the encouraging messages in Dan. 7-12, and from the same circle of the Hasideans from which came the apocalypses in the book of Daniel. Like the author of Dan. 7-12, the psalmist looks not to the swords of the valiant patriots but to God for a sudden and signal deliverance.

^{174¹} Possibly this line was inserted by a scribe, for it destroys the unity of the couplets which characterize the ps. as a whole and is unnecessary.

^{174²} Lit., lift up thy feet, i. e., go in person to the ruins and to the desecrated temple's site.

^{174⁴} Through the similarity of the Heb. words a scribe has omitted the Heb. word for there.

COMPLAINT OVER THE DESTRUCTION OF THE TEMPLE

⁵They hew away at the portal^m with axes, as in a thick forest,ⁿ ⁶And now all its carved work they break down with hatchet and hammers.
⁷They have set thy sanctuary on fire;
 They have defiled in the dust the dwelling place of thy name.
⁸They have said in their heart, 'Let us destroy them altogether.'
 They have burned up all the synagogues of God in the land.

⁹We see not our signs; there is no more any prophet;
 Neither is there among us any that knoweth how long.
¹⁰How long, O God, shall the adversary reproach,
 Shall the enemy blaspheme thy name forever?
¹¹Why drawest thou back thy hand, O Jehovah?^o
 Why dost thou hold back^p thy right hand in the midst of thy bosom?

When wilt thou interpose?

¹²Thou,^q O Jehovah, art our^r king of old,
 Working salvation in the midst of the earth.
¹³Thou didst divide the sea by thy strength;
 Thou crushedst the heads of the sea-monsters^s in the waters,
¹⁴Thou crushedst the heads of the leviathan^t in pieces;
 Thou gavest him as food to the people of the wilderness,^u
¹⁵It is thou who didst cleave out springs and brooks,^v
 It is thou who didst dry up mighty rivers.
¹⁶The day is thine, the night also is thine;
 It is thou who didst prepare the luminary^w and the sun.
¹⁷Thou didst fix all the boundaries of the earth;
 It is thou who didst make both summer and winter.

The

¹⁸Remember this, that the enemy hath reproached, O Jehovah,
 And that a foolish people hath blasphemed thy name.
¹⁹Oh give not the life of thy turtle-dove^x to the wild beast;
 Forget not forever the life of thine afflicted.
²⁰Look on the fat ones,^y for they, indeed, are full;^z
 The dark places of the earth are abodes of violence.
²¹Oh let not the oppressed turn away abashed;
 Let the poor and needy ever praise thy name.

Arise

wicked

^m 74⁵ So Lat. (lit., top of portal), supported in part by Gk. Lit., as the entrance upwards.
ⁿ 74⁵ Lit., thicket of trees.
^o 74¹¹ Supplying the word back demanded by the sense of the context.
^p 74¹¹ Correcting the Heb. as the context and parallelism require.
^q 74¹² Again slightly restoring the text.
^r 74¹² So Gk.
^s 74¹³ Apparently not a reference to the overthrow of the Egyptians in the waters of the Red Sea but to the conquest of Tehom, the primeval monster, and to the work of creation.
^t 74¹⁴ Cf. Job 3⁸.
^u 74¹⁴ I. e., the jackals. Cf. 63¹⁰, 72⁹. RV, inhabiting the wilderness.
^v 74¹⁵ A reference to Jehovah's power over nature, as illustrated, e. g., by the opening of the rock in order to provide water, Ex. 17⁶, Nu. 20⁸.
^w 74¹⁶ I. e., the moon, as Gk.
^x 74¹⁹ I. e., the defenceless people of Israel.
^y 74²⁰ Heb., look to the covenant; but this is apparently due to a slight corruption of the Heb. which has been restored as Duhm suggests.
^z 74²⁰ I. e., of booty, hence the figure fat, which means arrogant and corrupt. The dark places may be the caves to which the Maccabean refugees fled and where many were slain.

PETITIONS FOR DELIVERANCE FROM THE HEATHEN

²Arise, O God, plead thine own cause,
Remember how the impious man reproacheth thee continually,
²Forget not the clamor of those who are hostile to thee,
Nor the din of thine opponents which continually ascendeth.

§ 148. Prayer for Deliverance from the Hands of Cruel Persecutors, Ps. 79

Fate of

Ps. 79 ¹O God, the nations are come into thine inheritance,
Thy holy temple have they defiled,
They have laid Jerusalem in heaps.
²They have given the corpses of thy servants^a
As food to the birds of the heavens,
The flesh of thy pious ones to the wild beasts;
³Their blood have they poured out like water,
Around Jerusalem, with none to bury them.^b
⁴We are become a reproach to our neighbors,
The scorn and derision of those around us.

⁵How long, O Jehovah, wilt thou be angry?
Shall thy jealousy burn like fire?

⁶Pour out thy wrath upon the nations^c that know thee not,
Yea, upon the kingdoms, O Jehovah,^d that do not call upon thy name;
⁷For they have devoured^e Jacob, and laid waste his dwelling place.
⁸Remember not against us in judgment the iniquities of our forefathers;^f

§ 148 According to its superscription this ps. was included in a collection of Asaph ps. It has been assigned by different scholars to two different periods: the Bab. exile and the Maccabean struggle. There is practically no doubt, however, that it comes from the later crisis. In contents and point of view it is closely parallel to 74. The opening description of the desecration of the temple and of the slaughter of the faithful Jews is very similar to the account of Antiochus Epiphanes's merciless persecutions in II Mac. 8¹⁻⁴. There is no suggestion of such a slaughter when the Babylonians captured Jerusalem. Their treatment of the conquered people appears to have been characterized by their usual judicial fairness. The atrocities here described are also directed not so much against the Jews as against Jehovah and his temple. Vs. 11 implies that the prisoners were unjustly condemned to death, as in the days of Antiochus Epiphanes. The warlike, vindictive spirit that finds expression in 6, 12 is characteristic of the Maccabean period. The persecuted saints in 2 are, without reasonable doubt, the Hasideans, who later rallied about Judas. Vss. 4, 5 indicate that the author had in mind not the petty party persecutions under the hellenizing high priest Alcimus but the attacks and taunts of the hostile nations in the early days of the Maccabean struggle. The absence of any references to Judas or to the rededication of the temple indicate that it was written before 165. Like 74, it voices the feelings of the faithful about 167-166 B.C., when the persecutions of Antiochus were at their height.

This is one of the few ps. quoted in the first book of Maccabees. Vss. 2 and 3 are cited as written in the scriptures and are used to describe the slaughter of certain Hasideans by the perfidious Alcimus. If 79 was an early ps. it doubtless would have been spoken of as a ps. of David. The absence of such a tradition implies that it was known to be the work of a comparatively recent writer but of a poet whose words had already gained a certain degree of authority. The quotation in I Mac. 7¹⁷ is condensed and incomplete. It reads:

*The flesh of thy saints . . .
And their blood they poured out round about Jerusalem;
And there was no man to bury them.*

^a79² I. e., the Hasideans.

^b79³ Supplying the them, implied by the context, from the quotation from this passage in I Mac. 7¹⁷.

^c79⁶. ⁷ An echo of Jer. 10²⁵. For nations or heathen in Jer. 10²⁵ has families. Influenced by the quotation from the earlier dirge, the metre here changes from the three to the five-beat measure.

^d79⁶ Supplying Jehovah, required by the metre.

^e79⁷ So the original in Jer. 10²⁵. Heb., he devours.

^f79⁸ Or former sins. Vs. 9 might refer to sins of either the earlier or of the present generation. The idea that one generation suffered for those of earlier generations was repeatedly taught in the O.T., e. g., Ex. 20⁶, Dt. 28¹⁵, Jer. 11¹¹, Lam. 5⁷, and rests upon a basis of practical experience.

DELIVERANCE FROM CRUEL PERSECUTORS

Let thy compassion speedily come to meet us,^a for we are brought very low.
⁹Help us, O God of our salvation, for the glory of thy renown,
 And deliver us, and forgive^b our sins, for the sake of thy name.

¹⁰Why should the heathen keep saying, 'Where is their God?'
 Let the avenging of the shed blood of thy servants be known among the nations;ⁱ
¹¹Let the sighing of the prisoner come before thy face, O Lord,^j
 According to the greatness of thy arm preserve^k those condemned to death,^l ¹²Yea, render to our neighbors sevenfold into their bosom
 Their reproach, wherewith they have cast reproach upon thee, O Lord.
¹³So we thy people and sheep of thy pasture^m will thank thee forever;
 We will rehearse to generation after generation the praise due thee.

And
 avenge their wrongs

§ 149. Prayer That God Will Rescue and Reunite His People, Ps. 80

Ps. 80 ¹O Shepherd of Israel, hear!
 Thou who ledestⁿ Joseph like a flock;
 Throned upon the cherubim, shine forth!
²Before Ephraim and Benjamin and Manasseh, Awaken thy warlike might,
 And come thou to us for our salvation.
³O God of hosts,^o restore us,
 Cause thy face to shine, that we may be saved.

Rise

⁴O Jehovah^p of hosts, how long
 Wilt thou be wroth while thy people pray?
⁵Wilt thou feed them with the bread of tears,
 And give them tears to drink by large measure,
⁶Make us the butt^q of our neighbors,
 While our enemies make us their derision?^r
⁷O God of hosts, restore us,
 Cause thy face to shine, that we may be saved.

How long before thou wilt restore our prosperity?

^a79^a I. e., let Jehovah in his mercy quickly deliver us. The figure is that of messengers coming to meet those in need.

^b79^b Lit., cover.

ⁱ79ⁱ A scribe has evidently expanded this line by adding in our sight.

^j79^j Adding O Lord, required to complete the measure.

^k79^k Lit., save over, cause to remain alive.

^m79^m This last vs. may be a liturgical addition. It is an echo of 23, which this later psalmist evidently interpreted as a communal rather than individual ps.

§ 149 This ps., like 110 and 101, is a valuable historical document. The boar in ¹², which has ravaged the vine Israel, transplanted by Jehovah from Egypt, is, beyond reasonable doubt, Antiochus Epiphanes. The man of thy right hand, the son of the man whom Jehovah hath strengthened for himself, is probably Judas Maccabeus. The poet in the opening stanza reveals his familiarity with Ezek. and in ¹³ with the late traditions regarding the kingdom of David. He hopes, like Ezek., for a union of the Heb. tribes and a restoration of the ancient glories.

ⁿ80ⁿ Correcting traditional Heb. vocalization.

^o80^o So Syr. Heb. omits hosts, but cf. ¹.

^p80^p Heb. inserts God, but the form is ungrammatical, indicating that the word is not original.

^q80^q Lit., contention.

^r80^r So two Heb. MSS., Gk., Lat., and Syr. Heb., to themselves.

⁸Thou broughtest^a a vine out of Egypt;
Thou didst drive out the nations and plantedst it.
⁹Thou didst clear the way before it,
And it took root and filled the land.

And the cedars of God with its boughs;
¹¹It sent out its branches to the sea,
Yea, its shoots to the river.^b

So that all who pass by the way do pluck it?
¹³The boar out of the wood doth ravage it,

¹⁴O God of hosts, restore us;
Look down from heaven and behold;
Give heed to this thy vine,
¹⁵And the stock which thy right hand hath planted.^c
¹⁶They have burned it with fire, they have hewn it^d down;
May they perish at the frown of thy countenance.^e

¹⁷Let thy hand be upon the man of thy right hand,
Upon that man whom thou hast strengthened for thyself.
¹⁸So will we not draw back from thee;
Quicken thou us and we will call on thy name.
¹⁹O Jehovah, God of hosts, restore us;
Let thy face shine, that we may be saved.

Ps. 35 ¹Plead thou, O Jehovah, my cause;^{*} fight them who fight me.
²Take hold of shield and buckler and stand up for my help.

^a80^a Lit., lifted up.

^b80^b I. e., extended from the Mediterranean Sea to the Euphrates River, the traditional bounds of the Heb. empire under David.

^c80^c A scribe, by mistake, has introduced ^{17b} here and then repeated it in its original position.
^d80^d As it stands, the Heb. lacks consistency. The translation given above is based on a slightly different vocalization of the traditional Heb.

^e80^e I. e., because their wanton act meets the divine disapproval.

Imprecatory Psalms.—The imprecatory ps. are not the highest products of Israel's faith. They are rather a survival of the ancient belief that a curse had a certain potency in itself. Under the influence of this belief the old Assyr. kings called down a curse upon any one who in future § 150 This is a typical imprecatory ps. It evidently voices the woes and the problems of the faithful in the Judean community in the days preceding the appearance of Nehemiah. The foes are apparently the arrogant, impious Jews who had cast off all pity or sense of justice.

^{*}35¹ So eight Heb. MSS. and Syr. Trad. Heb., with those who contend with me. The Heb. word means contend in the law courts.

A CRY FOR VENGEANCE

- ³Draw out spear and javelin^y to meet those who pursue me;
 Say to my soul, O Jehovah:^z 'Thy salvation am I.'
⁴Let them be ashamed and brought to dishonor who seek after my life;
 Let them be turned back and confounded who devise my hurt.
⁵Let them be as chaff before the wind, thy^a messenger pursuing them.
⁶Let their way be dark and slippery,^b thy^a messenger pursueth them.
⁷For without cause they have spread their net for me; without cause digged a pit^c for me.
⁸May^d the net they have spread catch them; in their own pit^c may they fall.
⁹Then my soul will be joyful in Jehovah; it will rejoice in his salvation.
¹⁰All my bones will say, 'Jehovah, who is there like thee,
 Who deliverest the afflicted from the stronger, and the needy^f from robbers?'
- ¹¹Witnesses of violence^g rise up, they ask me whereof I know not;
¹²They reward me evil for good, even the bereavement of my soul.
¹³But as for me when they were sick, my clothing was sackcloth,^h
 I afflicted my soul with fasting, my prayer was in my bosom;ⁱ
¹⁴As though it had been my friend, my own brother, so I demeaned myself;
 As a man mourneth for his own mother,^j so was I bowed down in grief.
¹⁵But now, when I stumble, they rejoice, and gather together^k against me;
 Smiters, when I know it not, tear me asunder and cease not.^l ages dared to remove or mutilate the royal inscriptions. The Heb. word for curse means to bind. The story of Balaam illustrates the popular conception of the effects of a curse. According to I Sam. 17⁴², Goliath cursed David by his gods. II Kgs. 5²⁷ states that, as a result of Elisha's curse on the guilty Gehazi, he went out from men snow-white from leprosy. The Heb. sage, in Pr. 26³, declares, the curse that is causeless shall not come; but he still held the popular belief regarding the curse pronounced for a cause.

The imprecatory pss. are uttered more in the spirit of early prophets than of Jesus. To interpret them rightly it must be remembered (1) that they were usually uttered in behalf of the nation or a persecuted class rather than of an individual; (2) that the men or nations against which they were uttered were cruel, shameless, deliberately, criminal, condemned by law and moral sense; (3) that in the minds of the psalmists the justice of Jehovah's rule of the world was the real issue at stake. The higher the poet's sense of justice and his conception of Jehovah's righteousness, the more passionate his prayer that Jehovah would not only vindicate his servants but himself. McFadyen has rightly said, from this point of view the imprecations are only the vehement expression of a passionate belief in the moral order and of a desire to see its consummation hastened. These pss. are grimly illumined by the context and by the pitiless age in which they were written; but for the same reason they are not adapted to modern Jewish or Christian worship.

⁷35³ With Briggs (Pss., I, 103), correcting the Heb. as the context requires.

⁸35³ Supplying the Jehovah required by the measure.

⁸35⁴. ⁸ Heb., the angel of Jehovah, but Jehovah is addressed.

⁸35⁶ Lit., darkness and slippery places.

⁸35⁷ So Syr. Heb. introduces pit in the first instead of in the second part of the line where it belongs.

⁸35⁸ A scribe has introduced at the beginning of this vs. a quotation from Is. 47¹¹, may destruction come upon him unawares. The immediate sequel of ⁷, however, is ^{8b}, which is concrete and carries on the figure and parallelism. Under the influence of the inserted quotation the original plural has been changed to the sing. in the Heb.

⁸35⁸ Restoring pit, cf. ⁷, for which destruction has been substituted under the influence of the quotation.

⁸35¹⁰ This line is an echo of Jer. 31¹¹ and may be secondary, for in its present form it does not fit the measure of the ps. Probably afflicted, which is repeated before the needy, is secondary and the line is original.

⁸35¹¹ I. e., those who bring unjust charges of violence against me.

⁸35¹³ I. e., I put on the Oriental garments of mourning.

⁸35¹³ I. e., I was engaged in constant prayer. Heb. adds returned.

⁸35¹⁴ Or went in procession (Briggs).

⁸35¹⁵ A scribe has, by mistake, repeated the verb gather together.

⁸35¹⁵ The text is probably corrupt and can be only conjecturally restored.

IMPRECATORY PSALMS

¹⁶In my pollution they bitterly mock me;^m they gnash upon me with their teeth.

¹⁹Let not mine enemies wrongfully^p rejoice over me, winking with the eye,

²⁰For they speak not peace, but against those who are at peace in the land;
They devise malignant designs ²¹and they open wide their mouth against me;

They say, 'Aha, aha, our eye hath seen it.'

²²Thou hast seen it, O Jehovah, be not silent,^a keep not afar from me;

²³Rouse thee, awake for my judgment,^r for my cause, O my God;

²⁴Judge me, O Jehovah,^s according to thy righteousness, and let them not rejoice over me.

²⁵Let them not say in their heart, 'Aha, our desire!' we have swallowed him up!

²⁶Let them be ashamed and confounded together who rejoice at my hurt;
Let them be clothed with shame and dishonor who magnify themselves against me.

²⁷Let them shout and be glad, who delight in my right and say continually:
'May Jehovah be magnified, who delighteth in the prosperity of his servant.'

²⁸And my tongue shall talk of thy righteousness, of thy praise all the day long.

rulers

Ps. 58 ¹Are ye in very truth speaking what is right?

Do ye judge with equity the sons of men?

²Nay, all of you^u work wickedness;

In the land your hands weigh out violence.

³The wicked become estranged as soon as they are born,^v

Those who speak lies go astray from birth.

⁴Their venom is just like the venom of a serpent;

They are like the deaf adder that stoppeth its ear,

⁵Which payeth no heed to the voice of charmers,

To him who is the most skillful worker of spells.

^m35¹⁶ Again restoring the text conjecturally (with Briggs) and with the aid of the Gk.

^o35¹⁷ Apparently a scribe has added the interjectional sentence at the beginning of the vs., Lord, how long wilt thou look on. The sequel of ¹⁸ is ^{17b}.

^o35¹⁷ Slightly correcting the Heb., which reads, for their destruction.

^p35¹⁹ The Heb. has a cumbersome explanatory note, those who hate me without a cause.

^q35²² Heb. adds O Lord, destroying the symmetry of the measure.

^r35²³ Again the Heb. adds O Lord.

^s35²⁴ Heb. adds my God.

^t35²⁵ Heb. repeats let them not say.

§ 151 This virile ps. probably comes from the first half of the Persian period. Its style is equal to that of Is. 56-59. It is addressed to the unprincipled rulers of the Judean community.

^u58² So Syr. Heb., in heart; but this is probably due to a scribal error.

^v58³ Lit., from the womb.

^w 58⁷ Slightly revising the text and transposing one word. Note the wealth of figures.

^x 58⁸ So Targ., Gk., Lat., and Syr., wax.

^y 58⁹ So Targ., supported by the context. Gk., Syr., and Lat., hath fire fallen, they do not be- hold the sun.

^z 58⁹ So Syr. and one Heb. MS.

^a 58⁹ Text doubtful.

^b 58¹¹ Or, as in Ex. 22⁸, are judges.

§ 152 This ps. is a striking illustration of the survival of the belief in the potency of a curse pronounced upon the guilty, for it is one long curse. It is not clear whether the foe described in 4-10 is a typical enemy or a despotic ruler. The portrait in 14-18 would fit the perfidious high priests Menelaus and Jason or the arch persecutor of the Maccabean days Antiochus Epiphanes. If the latter is in the psalmist's mind, the other foes of which he speaks at the beginning and end of the ps. would be the minions of Antiochus and the apostate Jews. In any case the ps. probably comes from the early part of the Maccabean struggle. Like the other hideous fruits of war and conflict, it illustrates the savage rather than the diviner impulses in the human heart and should have no place in our modern worship.

^c 109² Heb. adds and the mouth of deceit; but this destroys the metrical symmetry and is probably a scribal expansion. Briggs deletes the entire line.

^d 109⁴ Heb., and I myself, my prayer. For them has probably fallen out or else this line is secondary. The next vs., however, supports it.

^e 109⁶ I. e., Satan to prosecute and persecute him.

^f 109^{7b-9} Under the influence of the tense feeling the quick, excited two-beat measure appears.

^w 109²⁸ So Gk. Heb., they arise.

^x 109³¹ Slightly revising the Heb. Lit., pronounce sentence upon his soul, i. e., condemn him to death.

§ 153 The literary beauty and pathos of this ps. are obvious. Even in describing the harrowing experiences of the centuries, the psalmist uses peaceful agricultural figures. The implied contrast heightens the effect. Vss. ³⁻⁴ point to the Maccabean era as the date of the ps.

^y 129⁴ The Gk. and Lat. suggest that possibly the original read backs. In that case the line would mean that Jehovah broke the might of Israel's wicked foes. The traditional reading, however, is clearly intelligible, i. e., broke the bonds with which they had bound Israel.

^z 129⁶ Lit., draw out (the blade). Certain scholars regard this as a reference to the sickle with which the grass was cut.

^a 129⁸ Cf. Ruth 2⁴. A scribe has added a response, We bless you in the name of Jehovah.

§ 154 Briggs urges that the foes mentioned in ²⁻⁸ were those who confronted Nehemiah. Cf. Neh. 1-4. But to do this he is forced to identify Assyria in ² with Samaria. Elsewhere in post-exilic literature Assyria is the classic equivalent of its later derivative, Syria, e. g., Zech. 10¹⁰. The Philistines, Syrians, and Moabites (sons of Lot) were not actively allied against the Jews in the days of Nehemiah. The historical situation that fully satisfies the implications of the ps. is graphically described in I Mac. 5. The brilliant initial victories of Judas led the encircling heathen nations, leaning on the arm of Syria, ², to unite in a confederacy against the Jews. This ps. voices the feelings of the warriors who followed the gallant Judas in his hard-fought campaign against these peoples.

IMPRECATORY PSALMS

§ 156. Petition That Innocence May Be Vindicated, Ps. 26

- Ps. 26 ¹Judge me, O Jehovah,

And in Jehovah have I trusted without wavering.
²Test me, O Jehovah, and prove me,
Try my heart and my mind.

Protes-tation of innocence

§ 155 The two chief notes in this ps. are loyalty to Jehovah and imprecations upon Israel's foes who are represented by the Edomites, that Arab people who by the days of Nehemiah had occupied the territory of southern Judah and were pressing the Jewish community on its southern border. Briggs may be right in his contention that Babylon in the first line is secondary, for it, like the following Heb. word there, is superfluous both from the point of view of metre and the demands of the context. It is again inserted in ², where it is clearly secondary as well as the untranslatable word which follows. The phrase in her midst, in ², tends to support, however, the presence of the word Babylon in ¹. Its presence there is also consistent with the retrospect of the distant past in ¹⁻⁴. It also explains why the scribe inserted daughter of Babylon in ². The Bab. exile lies so far away from the poet's horizon that it is probable that he did not write before the middle of the Persian period. In later generations, and especially in the early stages of the Maccabean struggle, Jewish hostility to the Edomites increased rather than diminished. The imprecatory spirit of this ps. also finds its closest parallels in the hymns of this later period. The same inference may be drawn from the intense loyalty to Jerusalem expressed in the second stanza. The grim beatitudes at the end of the ps. furnish a striking contrast with those that fell from the lips of the great Teacher of Nazareth.

^k 137² Transferring the superfluous there, cf. ¹, to ², where it completes the measure.

^l 137³ Slightly revising the untranslatable Heb. text and translating the Heb. word which means joy as the parallelism suggests.

^m 137⁴ Lit., song of Jehovah.

ⁿ 137⁵ So Gk. and Lat. Heb., forget.

^o 137⁶ Lit., head of my joy.

§ 156 The two distinctive elements in this ps. are the presence of malicious persecutors, apparently within the Jewish community itself, and the psalmist's devotion to the temple and its services; both point to the second half or middle of the Persian period.

IMPRECATORY PSALMS

Thou art my help, do not abandon me,
And do not forsake me, O God of my salvation.

But Jehovah taketh me up.

^e26¹¹ So Gk. Heb. omits Jehovah.

^f26¹² I. e., in the level court of the temple area as the next line indicates.

§ 157 There are no definite indications of the date of this ps. It probably comes from the first half of the Persian period. Cf., for ¹⁻⁴, § 104.

^a27¹ So Gk. and Syr. Heb. adds an unnecessary and.

^b27² The text of this line is badly mutilated, but it is possible to restore what was clearly the original text.

ⁱ27¹¹ The scribe has added for the sake of mine adversaries; but this is inconsistent both with the metre and with the context.

¹²⁷¹² Slightly restoring the text as the context and metre require. To the original ps. a new editor or scribe has added the following prose lines, Unless I had believed to see the goodness of Jehovah in the land of the living. . . . Wait on Jehovah, be strong, and let thy heart be firm and wait on Jehovah.

§ 158 It is evident that this is a personal rather than a national song. It is probably one of the many of similar tenor which come from the first part of the Persian period.

^{k411} Following the suggestion of the Gk., which adds needy in reconstructing the text.

^{l412} Heb. adds make him happy. Possibly this is original, although the absence of the connective and suggests that this one of the three verbs in the line was added by a later scribe.

^{m413} Following the VSS. in correcting an obvious error in the Heb.

ⁿ⁴¹⁴ Translating the Heb., which reads thou hast changed all his bed in his illness, as the parallelism demands.

^{o4110} Heb. adds and I will repay them. Possibly this is a fragment of a line that has been otherwise lost, but more probably it is a scribal addition.

^{p4112} This ps., standing at the end of the first Davidic collection, has appended to it the doxology:

*Blessed be Jehovah, the God of Israel,
From everlasting unto everlasting. Amen and amen.*

§ 159 This prayer is based on the promise of Lev. 26³⁻⁹ and its opening vss. are a paraphrase of the priestly blessing in Nu. 6²⁴⁻²⁶. The broad missionary note relates this hymn of mingled

PETITIONS FOR VINDICATION AND RESTORATION

'That thy way may be known upon earth,
Thy saving power among all the nations.
'Let the peoples give thee thanks, O Jehovah,
Let all the peoples be glad thee thanks,
'Let the nations be glad and shout for joy,
For thou governest the peoples with equity,
And guidest the nations upon earth.

'Let the peoples give thee thanks, O Jehovah,
Let all the peoples give thee thanks.
'The earth hath yielded her increase, on and thanksgiving to Zech. 8 and Is. 40-50. Vs. 6 indicates that its background is a time prosperity, when the Jews stood on a friendly attitude toward the heathen. It comes either the days following Nehemiah or from the early Gk. period. The refrain is found at the being of the second and third stanzas.

'677 Heb. repeats Jehovah will bless us, but it is incongruous with the prevailing strophic sure and is probably secondary.
§ 160 This beautiful pilgrim ps. is written in the unusual six-beat measure. Like most of pilgrim pss., it comes from the Gk. period.
'1223 Syr., adds as is prescribed to Israel.
'1224 Heb. adds as is prescribed to Israel.
'1224 Heb., to Jehovah's name.
'1226 So Gk.
§ 161 This ps. has been described as colorless, lifeless, and void of all originality. It certainly lacks unity and vigor. Its ideas are chiefly drawn from the prophetic books and earlier pss. It also lacks the carefully developed metrical parallelism that characterizes most pss. Its dependence upon Jonah, cf. e. g., 5. 16 and Jon. 4; and upon other late O.T. books suggests that it was written by a person in sympathy with the forerunners of the Hasideans who lived late in the Gk.
or early in the Maccabean period.

APPEAL FOR GUIDANCE AND HELP

Save thy servant who trusteth in thee.
 Thou art^v my God, ³be gracious to me,^w

Like the slain who lie in the grave,
Whom thou rememberest no more,
Even those who are cut off from thy hand.

In dark places, in deepest gloom.

And all thy breakers thou hast broughtⁱ upon me.

§ 162 Delitzsch has rightly described this as the gloomiest of all the plaintive ps. It has affinities with Job, but the problem is physical, not moral. Imprisoned, ⁴, deserted by friends, the poet faces death, and he frankly confesses that he is appalled by its terrors. Does the abrupt ending mean that the grim messenger of darkness stayed his hand. As a national hymn it was well fitted to describe the agony of the early Maccabean era.

^{188ⁱ} With Duhm and others slightly revising the Heb., which reads, O Jehovah the God of my salvation.

^{188⁴} Lit., pit; i. e., I am regarded as practically dead.

^{188⁵} Heb. is evidently corrupt; the VSS. give little help. The above is based on a conjectural emendation that is in harmony with the context.

^{188⁷} So Gk., Syr., and Lat. RV translates Heb., thou hast afflicted me.

^{188¹⁵} Or, emending with Duhm, from affliction.

^k 88^u Gk., Lat., and Syr. translate the three Heb. words in this line by three verbs. Following this suggestion, Briggs (Pss., II, 248) reads, I endure, I am brought low, I am turned backward. In any case these VSS. are our best guide in interpreting the otherwise unknown final Heb. verb.

^l 88^u Briggs transposes after the analogy of ²³ so as to read, thou hast removed from me mine acquaintance.

§ 163 This is appropriately described in its superscription as a prayer of the afflicted, when he is overwhelmed, and pours out his complaint before Jehovah. The sequel to ¹¹ is found in ²³⁻²⁷, to which has been added ²⁸ by an editor, who, quoting from the song of Hezekiah in Is. 38¹⁰, sought to weld together the two ps. The gloss is a weak repetition of the thought of ¹¹, He hath brought down my strength in the way; he hath shortened my days. Vs. ²⁸ is also introduced by, I say, O my God. The logical connection of this last stanza is close, for it suggests Jehovah's power to deliver. Originally this ps. appears to have voiced the psalmist's personal experience, although it was equally well fitted to express the feelings of the Jews during the first part of the Persian or the Maccabean periods.

^m 102³ Heb. has only to me, but the implied verb has, through a scribal error, been transferred to the end of the vs., where it is superfluous.

ⁿ 102³ So Gk., Lat., and Targ. Heb., in.

^o 102⁴ Heb. adds, destroying the metre, and withered.

^p 102⁷ So Syr. Heb. has lost the final word.

^q 102⁸ Or who pierces.

^{a 123}³ Heb. adds exceedingly, probably under the influence of the next line.

^{a 123}⁴ A scribe has expanded this line by adding with the scorn of those without care.

§ 166 The title, A Psalm of David; when Nathan the prophet came to him after he had gone in to Bathsheba, has confirmed in the minds of many readers the Davidic authorship of this ps. There is little, however, in II Sam. or the ps. itself to support this conjecture of a later editor. If David's repentance had been as profound as that of the psalmist, Israel's history would have been very different. The ps., on the other hand, represents not the crude beginnings but the maturity of Israel's religion. The great ideas of both I and II Is. pervade it. Cf., e. g., ², ³, ⁷ and Is. 1¹⁸, vs. ⁴ and Is. 59¹³, vs. ⁹ and Is. 51¹⁰, ¹¹, vs. ¹² and Is. 63¹⁰, ¹¹, vs. ¹⁴⁻¹⁵ and Is. 43²⁷, 54¹⁻⁸. The language and the theology are those of the middle of the Persian period. Its deep sense of sin is characteristic of the exilic and post-exilic literature. It has much in common with Nehemiah's prayer in Neh. 1. Whether, as seems probable, ¹², ¹⁹ represent a later appendix or not, the original ps. antedates 445 B.C., when the walls of Jerusalem were rebuilt. A date between 500 and 445 B.C. fully satisfies the implications contained in the ps.

^m51¹ Restoring the original Jehovah, which has been changed to Elohim throughout the group in which this ps. is found.

ⁿ51¹ Gk., my transgression. The Heb. word refers to deliberate sins.

^o51² The Heb. verb describes a continued state of feeling.

^p51⁴ The ordinary rendering of this vs. expresses just the opposite of what the psalmist clearly meant. His frank and full confession of his sins was in order that Jehovah might be justified in forgiving him.

^q51⁴ Gk., Syr., and Lat., in thy words.

^r51⁵ If the ps. is individual the psalmist evidently here refers not to any specific sin of his immediate ancestor but to the fact that he was born a member of the sinful human race. If the ps. is national the reference evidently is to the sinful origin of the nation as developed, for example, in Ezek. 16.

^s51⁶ This line is overfull and the meaning of the phrase translated, in the inward parts, is doubtful. Possibly the word which follows is but a scribal interpretation of the preceding. The current translation, however, which has been followed, is supported by the Targums and is in keeping with the spiritual content of the ps. Emending the text, Briggs translates this:

*Behold in faithfulness thou dost delight,
The confidence of wisdom thou makest me know.*

(Pss., II, 3). Duhm revises more radically and translates the vs.:

*Behold, thou lovest truth more than concealment,
And instructest me regarding hidden wisdom.*

^t51⁷ Hyssop was used in the ceremonial cleansing of a leper, according to the law of Lev. 14⁶, ⁸, ⁴⁹, and in cleansing one who had come in contact with the dead, Nu. 19⁶, ¹⁸.

^u51⁸ So Syr. and correcting one letter in the Heb. The current rendering, Let me hear, is not supported by the context.

^v 51⁹ I. e., overlook and pardon.
^w 51¹⁰ Cf., for the origin of this figure, Ezek. 11¹⁰, 36²⁸.
^x 51¹¹ One of the early O.T. examples of the use of the term holy spirit, i. e., the spirit of God, the Holy One. Cf. Is. 63¹⁰, ¹¹ for the only other O.T. passages in which the term occurs.
^y 51¹⁴ I. e., mortal sins.
^z 51¹⁴ Heb., God. This is followed by a scribal addition, God of my salvation, a phrase which is clearly out of harmony with the metrical structure of the ps.
^a 51¹⁶ Transposing this last clause to the last line as is demanded by the metrical structure of the vs. and by the context.
^b 51¹⁷ A scribe has repeated a synonym of the word crushed or broken, but the metrical structure of the vs. clearly reveals its secondary character.
^c 51¹⁹ This line has evidently been expanded by a later scribe. In its present Heb. form it reads, then thou shalt be pleased with the sacrifices of righteousness, burnt-offering, and whole-burnt offering. Possibly burnt-offering and whole-burnt offering is secondary. Vss. 18, 19 contradict the thought in ¹⁸ and are in all probability a Maccabean addition.
 § 167 The poet who wrote this exquisite ps. looked back upon the restoration from exile as ancient history. The return of prosperity in the days of Nehemiah was the evidence of the forgiveness of Israel's sins, ², ³. Dark clouds again lower on the horizon, ⁴, ⁵. These suggest the closing years of the Persian or else the Gk. period.
^d 85¹ Or restored the prosperity of.

Ps. 39 ¹I said, I will take heed to my ways that I sin not with my tongue,
 I will putⁱ a muzzle on my mouth while the wicked are in my presence.
²I was dumb and silent,^j but comfortless,^k and my grief was stirred;
³My heart was hot within me; while I was musing, the fire burned.
 Then I spoke with my tongue, "O Jehovah, make me know mine end.
 And what is the measure of my days, that I may know^l how frail I am.

^o85⁴ Lit., cause to break off, render ineffectual.

ⁱ85⁵ Heb. adds Jehovah, but this destroys the measure.

^s85⁵ So Gk. and Lat., which suggest the original order of the disarranged Heb. letters.

^h85¹³ Emending the Heb. as the context suggests.

§ 168 This ps. is a noble elegy written in the emotional five-beat measure. It deals with the ever-insistent problem of the suffering of the innocent. The poem contributes to its solution the thought that man's problems, after all, are insignificant compared with God's eternity. The problem is not merely abstract but was evidently presented concretely to the mind of the poet as the result of his own pain and affliction. It may have been written before the days of Nehemiah but probably in the Gk. period.

^l39¹ Slightly correcting what appears to have been a scribal error.

^j39² The Heb. adds I held my peace. But this appears to be a repetition of the preceding vs. and destroys the metrical structure.

^k39² Lit., from good.

^l39⁴ Possibly this verb is a scribal addition. In the above translation the reading of certain MSS., which add the conjunction, is followed.

THE BREVITY OF HUMAN LIFE

⁵Behold thou hast made my days as a handbreath, my lifetime is as nothing.
Before thee verily^m every man standeth but as vapor.

⁶Surely as a semblance man walketh about, as vapor he is disquieted.
He heapeth up riches and he knoweth not who shall gather them.
⁷And now, O Lord, for what do I wait? my hope is in thee;
⁸From all my transgressions deliver me, make me not the reproach of impious fools.
⁹I am dumb, I open not my mouth, because thou hast done it.
¹⁰Remove thy stroke from off me; I am consumed by thy might.^a

And as a watch in the night.^v

Man's frailty
and finite-
ness

^a 39^s Slightly correcting the Heb., which repeats the all twice in the line. The meaning of the vs. seems to be that finite man is, in the sight of God, but a passing vapor.

^s 39¹⁰ Following the Gk. Lit., by the might of thy hand.

^o 39¹² Heb. has simply at my tears.

^p 39¹³ This line is based on Job 10²⁹. 21.

§ 169 This ps. bears the striking title, A Prayer of Moses, the Man of God, probably suggested by the reminders of the opening chapters of Gen. in ¹. ² and by its majestic spirit. Like many of the hymns of the Psalter, it grew out of deep personal experience; but vs. 13-17 show that it was originally written to express the feelings of the Jewish community. Possibly, however, an older individual ps. is to be found in 1-12. If so, 13-17 contain a later appendix, intended to adapt it to use in public worship. In any case a satisfactory background is found for the ps. in the latter part of the Gk. period, when writers, like the author of Ecc., were meditating on the significance of life. The strong didactic purpose and the wisdom point of view revealed in the ps. confirm this dating.

^a 90¹ As has been pointed out by many commentators, the phrase our dwelling place, which is found in the standard Heb. text, obscures the thought of this opening stanza. It was probably introduced from 91⁹. Certain Gk. MSS., influenced by 91², read stronghold, indicating that the text was uncertain. The present Heb. reads:

*O Lord, thou art our dwelling place,
Thou art ours in all generations.*

^r 90¹ I. e., thou art eternal.

^s 90² So Gk., Syr., Targ., Aquila, and Syr., supported by the context. I. e., the dry land was separated from the waters. Cf. Gen. 1. Heb., thou hadst formed.

^u 90³ Cheyne, from æon to æon. Certain interpreters would transpose this and the following vs. The parallelism with ⁴. ⁵ supports the present order. It is a striking example of enveloping parallelism.

^v 90⁴ Not destruction, as in the current translations.

^v 90⁴ This two-beat line may be secondary.

¹⁵Make us glad according to the days thou hast afflicted us,
And the years wherein we have seen evil.
¹⁶Let thy work be revealed to thy servants,
And thy glory unto their children.
¹⁷May thy favor, O Lord,^e be upon us;
And establish thou the work of our hands.^f

^w90⁶ Following a suggestion of the Gk., which is strongly supported by the context. Cf. Haupt, Journ. of Bib. Lit., XXXI, Pt. III, 115, 116, who reads, Thou bringest them into being each year, lit., thou hast gendered. The current rendering, Thou carriest them away as with a flood; they are as sleep, makes no sense and is a loose translation of the Heb. The consonants of the Heb. word for year and sleep are the same. Gk. and Syr. retain the original year.

^x90⁸ So Briggs, Pss., II, 271.

^y90¹⁰ This division of the vs. improves the parallelism, metre, and thought.

^z90¹⁰ Lit., breadth. A revised text gives the reading most of them.

^a90¹¹ Following the Gk. supported by the parallelism. The current translation, and thy wrath according to the fear that is due thee, is simply an awkward attempt to extract a meaning from the corrupt Heb. text.

^b90¹² Or, with Haupt, make us know accurately how to number our days.

^c90¹² Lit., with Syr., Aquila, and Sym., enter into a heart of wisdom.

^d90¹² Lit., turn.

^e90¹⁷ Certain MSS. read, simply, favor of Jehovah. Heb. adds our God. The metre and the remarkable symmetry of this ps. confirm the conclusion that it originally read as above.

^f90¹⁷ So certain Heb. MSS. and Gk. The Heb. adds upon us, and the work of our hands establish it. This awkward addition is clearly due to the error of a scribe.

The Reflective and Didactic Psalms.—The sages speak in this group of ps., which might properly be classified with the other wisdom writings, such as Pr., B. Sir., and Job. Here the didactic purpose of the psalmist is clearly revealed. The wise teachers of old Israel realized that what men sang under the influence of deep emotion sank deepest into their consciousness. Plato voiced the same when he declared, the character of the people depends so much more upon their songs than upon anything else that we ought to make these the chief forces in education.

§ 170 In this vigorous hymn the thoughts of the prophets and sages mingle. Such passages as ²⁰ and ⁴³ indicate that the author lived very nearly if not quite contemporaneously with the author of Is. 40-55. Like the author of those immortal poems, the psalmist studies the past to learn the lessons which it taught regarding Jehovah's attitude toward his people and their obligations to him. History, in the poet's mind, is but an illustration of Jehovah's character and ways of dealing with men. The resemblance in general theme between this ps. and 78 and 105 is close. Its style is vigorous. It contains many ideas and figures taken from Am., Hos., and Ezek. Its prevailing expressions are those which characterize the writings of Jer. and Ezek. It certainly is not earlier than the period of Judah's decline. The prominence of the reflective, wisdom motif suggests a later date. Vss. ²⁰⁻²³ may refer to the Assyr. invasion but they find their natural background in the period of the Bab. exile. The foes are probably the Edomites and Ammonites, who improved the hours of Judah's humiliations to pay off old scores. The hope that Jehovah will soon rise in judgment finds its closest analogies in the prophecies of Hag. and Zech., so that the ps. is probably to be dated in the first half of the Persian period. The prologue, 31²², and the epilogue, 32⁴⁴, preserve the late tradition that Moses was the author of this ps. Probably the tradition that associated it with Moses is responsible for its place in the book of Deuteronomy.

^a 32⁴ A common designation of the Deity. Cf. 15, 18, 20, 21, 27 and II Sam. 22³ and often in ps. It is the symbol of his unchanging character ever present as a protection and refuge for his people. Great Rock was also a title often used of the Assyrians in addressing their gods.

^b 32⁴ Lit., crookedness, the antithesis of upright in the next line.

LESSONS FROM ISRAEL'S HISTORY

⁵His infamous sons have dealt with him corruptly^a—

A twisted and crooked generation!

⁶Is it Jehovah whom ye thus treat,

O senseless and unwise people?

Is not he thy father, who produced thee?

Is it not he who made thee and established thee?

⁷Remember the days of old,

Consider the days of the past;

Ask thy father and he will tell thee,

Thine elders and they will say to thee:

⁸When the Most High gave the nations their inheritance,

When he separated the sons of men,

He set up the boundaries between the peoples,

As the number of the sons of God.^d

⁹But the portion of Jehovah is his people;^e

The measure of his inheritance is Jacob.

¹⁰He found him in a land that was a wilderness,^f

In a waste of howling desert;

Protectingly he encircled and cared for him,

He guarded him as the pupil of his eye.^g

¹¹Like an eagle^h that stirreth up its nest,

That tenderly hovereth over its young,

He spread out his wings, he took him,

He bore him upon his pinions;

¹²Jehovah alone did lead him,

And no alien God was with him.

¹³He caused him to ride on the heights,ⁱ

And fed him^j with the fruitage of the field;

And he caused him to suck honey from the crag,^k

Oil, also, from the flinty rock,

¹⁴Curd of kine and sheep's milk,

With the fat of lambs and rams,

With the steers of Bashan and he-goats,

^a32^a All are agreed that this line is corrupt, but the scribal error is evidently a very ancient one. The above reading is based on the Heb. text, corrected with the aid of the Gk., Sam., Syr., and Targ. Another plausible reading suggested by Sym. is, Altogether corruptly have his sons dealt with him.

^d32^d So Gk. Heb., according to the number of the sons of Israel. If the Gk. was the original reading, it reflects the late Jewish doctrine that each nation has an angel presiding over it. Cf. Dan. 10¹³. 21. 12¹, B. Sir. 17¹⁷. This idea was clearly in the minds of the Gk. translators.

^e32^e Both the Sam. and Gk. join Jacob with this first line and add Israel at the end of the second line. This is strongly supported by the parallelism.

^f32^f The Gk. adds and.

^g32^g The popular translation, apple of his eye, while more familiar is in danger of being misunderstood.

^h32^h Lit., griffon-vulture.

ⁱ32ⁱ Lit., on the high places of the earth.

^j32^j So Gk., Sym., Luc., and Syr., and supported by the context. The Heb. reads, And he ate.

^k32^k In Palestine the limestone cliffs and caves are frequently the home of the bees.

³²⁴ Both the Gk., Luc., and Lat. have the third person demanded by the context, but the Heb. has the second person.
³²⁴ Lit., foaming or fomented. The Gk. and Luc. have simply wine.
³²⁵ This line is lacking in the Heb. but has been preserved in the Sym., Gk., Luc., and Targ., and is quoted in 31²⁰ and Neh. 9²⁵.
³²⁵ Lit., the Righteous One, an ancient designation of Israel; so also in 33²⁵, Is. 44³, and as a title of the primitive song-book, commemorating Israel's early victories.
³²⁵ The figure is that of a fat, sleek, lazy steer. Cf. the same in Am. 4¹.
³²⁵ So Gk., Luc., Syr., and Lat. The Heb., which suddenly changes to the second person in this line and then in the next reverts to the third, may possibly be right.
³²⁵ The exact meaning of this word is not known. The RV, sleek, is based on a revision of the text and is supported by several versions.
³²⁵ Lit., treated as a senseless fool.
³²⁷ Heb., shedim, probably similar to the Assy., shidu, minor deities represented by the bulls or colossi. The Gk. rendering demons best reproduces the primitive idea.
³²⁸ Following the better reading of the Gk., Sym., Luc., and Targ.
³²⁸ Lit., travailed in anguish. Jehovah is here conceived of in the double rôle of the father and mother of his people.
³²⁹ Lit., a generation of perversions, i. e., given to perversions.
³²⁹ Lit., breaths or vanities, a scornful designation of the false heathen deities.
³²⁹ A rude, disorganized horde.

LESSONS FROM ISRAEL'S HISTORY

²⁶They will be shrunken with famine,

And the teeth of wild beasts will I send upon them,
With the venom of the crawling things of the dust.^b

²⁵Without, the sword shall bereave,
And within the inner chambers terror,
Young man and virgin alike,
The sucking child with the man of gray hairs.

²⁶I would have said, "I will shatter them in pieces,"
I will blot out their memory from among men,"

²⁷Had I not dreaded vexation from my foes,
Lest their adversaries should not understand,
And say, "Our hand is victorious,"
And not, "Jehovah hath done all this."

²⁸For they are as a people bereft of counsel,
And among them there is no understanding.

²⁹Had they been wise, they would have understood this,
They would have perceived their final end.'

³⁰How should one pursue a thousand,
And two put ten thousand to flight,
Were it not that their^d Rock had sold these,
And Jehovah had delivered them up?

³¹For their rock is not as our Rock,
But our enemies themselves must mediate.^e

³²For their vine^f is from the vine of Sodom,
It springs forth from the rank soil of Gomorrah;
Their grapes are poisonous grapes,
They have clusters bitter as gall.

³³Their wine is the venom of serpents,
Deadly like the poison of cobras.

³⁴Is not that laid up in store for me,
Sealed up securely in my treasures,

³⁵For the day^g of vengeance and recompense,
For the time when their foot shall slip?
Since the day of their ruin is near,
And the things awaiting them are coming fast.

^a32^a Lit., bitter destruction, but the destruction was that of the pestilence. Cf. Ps. 91⁶, and bitter means malignant.

^b32^b Cf. the similar formulas in the Bab. flood story, Vol. I, p. 377.

^c32^c The Heb. word is of doubtful meaning. The above rendering is supported by a cognate root of the Arabic and by the Gk. and Luc.

^d32^d I. e., the Israelites.

^e32^e The idea appears to be somewhat the same as in I Sam. 2³, where this unusual word is also used. Unlike Jehovah's people, the heathen have no benign God to espouse their cause.

^f32^f I. e., their origin and nature.

^g32^g So Sym., Luc., Gk., and Lat. Heb. and Luc., for me. The error, which is an easy one, probably lies in the latter text. The context also supports the former.

§ 171. The Lessons Taught by Israel's Mistakes, Ps. 78

Ps. 78 ¹Give ear, O my people, to my teaching,
Incline your ears to my words.^p

Introduction

^b 32³³ Lit., pronounce judgment for. Cf. the repetition of the vs. in Ps. 135¹⁴.

¹ 32³³ For the same proverbial expression, cf. I Kgs. 14¹⁰, 21²¹, II Kgs. 9⁶, 14²³. It is equivalent to everyone.

^j 32³⁴ Following Sym., Gk., Lat., and Targ. The text reads, let there be.

^k 32⁴¹ Lit., the lightning of my sword.

^l 32⁴² So Gk. and Luc. and the probable meaning of the Heb. as supported by the analogy in Judg. 5²³. Another possible rendering is long-haired foe.

^m 32⁴³ So Sym., Gk., and Lat.

ⁿ 32⁴³ Or clear from guilt.

^o 32⁴³ So Gk. and Lat.

§ 171 Ps. 78 is one of the most repetitious ps. of the Psalter. It is closely related to the late Jewish haggadistic literature in which the historical was subordinate to the moral and religious purpose. The poet was clearly familiar with the composite narrative of the Pentateuch, cf., e. g., 12. 14, and with still later Jewish interpretations of it such as are found in the book of Jubilees. His identification of the manna in the wilderness with the food of heavenly beings, ²³, suggests acquaintance with Gk. thought. The enigma which he is seeking to solve, ², is apparently the question

^p 78¹ Heb., words of my mouth.

Who should arise and tell them to their children, ⁷That they might set their hope in God, of why the rival Samaritans are so perverse and have been rejected by Jehovah. His explanation is that they have been crooked from their earliest days, cf. ^o ⁶⁰⁻⁶¹, and that Jehovah at the beginning of Israelitish history chose not the tribe of Ephraim but the tribe of Judah, ⁶⁷⁻⁷³. Evidently the ps. is later than the Samaritan schism. The close resemblance between its elaborate preface and that of Pr. and the strong wisdom note all point to the Gk. period as the date. The conception of Israel's history as a cycle of sins, disasters, repentance, and deliverances is that of the editor of Judg.

^a78ⁿ Following the superior text of many Heb. MSS. Lit., with the skill of his hand.
§ 172 This ps. deals with the same theme as 78 and 105. Its purpose is didactic although it was intended for liturgical use. The author aims to bring out Jehovah's goodness by contrasting it with Israel's rebellions and ingratitude. Hence he begins with the people's lack of faith at the exodus. In general he follows the composite tradition of Ex. and Nu., indicating that he wrote late in the Persian or more probably in the Gk. period. Vs. ⁴⁷ indicates that the restoration was not yet complete. The ps. is really a midrash set to music. The general theory of Israel's history is that of the author of the book of Judges: it was a repeated cycle of rebellion, affliction at the hands of heathen foes, and divine deliverance.

^r106^t So Gk., Aquila, Theod., and certain Heb. MSS. Heb., me, and so throughout the vs.
^t106⁷ Heb. adds in Egypt, but this destroys the metre and is probably only a scribal addition.

^a106⁷ Slightly revising the Heb. The Gk. variant indicates that the vs. was corrupt.

So he led them in the depths, as in a wilderness,^u
¹⁰And he saved them from the hand of the enemy,
 And redeemed them from the hand of the foe.
¹¹And the waters covered their adversaries;
 Not even one of them was left.
¹²Then they believed his words,
 They sang his praise.^v

¹³They soon forgot his works,
 They waited not for his counsel,
¹⁴But felt a great longing in the wilderness,
 And tested God in the desert.
¹⁵And he granted to them their request,
 But sent leanness^w unto their soul.
¹⁶In the camp they were envious of Moses,
 And of Aaron, the holy one of Jehovah;
¹⁷The earth opened up and swallowed Dathan,
 And covered the company of Abiram,
¹⁸And a fire consumed their company;
 The flame burned up the wicked.^x

¹⁹They made a calf at Horeb,
 And worshipped a molten image;
²⁰Thus they exchanged their glory
 For the image of an ox that eats grass.
²¹They forgot God their Saviour,
 Who had done great deeds in Egypt,
²²Wonderful works in the land of Ham,
 Terrible deeds at the Red Sea.
²³Therefore he said that he would destroy them,
 Had it not been that Moses his chosen
 Stood before him, stepping into the breach,
 To turn away his wrath from destroying.

²⁴Then they despised the pleasant land,
 They believed not his word,
²⁵But murmured in their tents,
 And heeded not the voice of Jehovah.
²⁶So he swore unto them with uplifted hand,
 That he would let them perish in the wilderness,
²⁷And that he would sow their seed among the nations,
 And scatter them abroad^y in the lands.

§ 173 The unity of the ps. has been questioned. Duhm finds two poems, 1-15. ²⁰ and 16-19; Briggs, 1-15 and 16-20. Vss. 15²¹ & 16²² are, however, but a highly poetic development of the theme of 15: Jehovah's acts of deliverance in Israel's early history. The thought of the ps. is closely related to that of 78 and 80. It probably comes from the latter part of the Persian or else of the Gk. period when the persecutions of the court at Antioch and of the apostate high priests were making the lot of the faithful increasingly trying.

^a81^u So one Heb. MSS., Gk., and Lat. Heb., thoe.

§ 175 Many interpreters regard this ps. as a composite, but both stanzas illustrate the fact that in the end all of man's prosperity comes from Jehovah: house, the security of the city, and children. These represent, respectively, material, political, and domestic peace and prosperity. Instead of being composite this is conspicuous for its close literary unity. It probably comes from the Gk. period. It is one of very few examples of Heb. poetry written in a prevailing six-beat measure.

^r127¹ Following the Gk. in revising the corrupt Heb.

^a127² Most recent commentators translate in sleep, but there is no indication in the Heb. or VSS. that sleep is not the direct object which the verb demands. The idea is that sleep is a gift of Jehovah. Therefore men are foolish to reject it by rising too early or sitting up too late.

^a127³ Following one Gk. text in translating the verbs in this line as singular rather than as plural.

§ 176 This little four-beat poem is appended to a longer three-beat Maccabean hymn. It is probable that it is a fragment of a longer ps. The presence of many Aramaisms and its position in the Psalter suggest that it is a song of thanksgiving and exultation expressing the feelings of the Jews under their Maccabean rulers, when at last, as in the days of Simon, they enjoyed in peace the fruits of their many conflicts and victories. The figures of speech are vigorous and the constructions original.

^a144¹² The editor who joined this poem to the Maccabean prayer has prefaced it by the word because.

^v144¹³ The Heb. word is usually translated streets, but Briggs is undoubtedly right in maintaining that in the present context it has the meaning fields or pastures.

Aleph

Ps. 119 ¹Blessed are they whose way is blameless, who follow Jehovah's law;
²Happy are they who observe his decrees,^g who seek him whole heartedly;

§ 177 This ps. in praise of the law was appropriately joined with the noble poem in praise of God's glory as revealed in the heavens. Cf. § 92. Like Ps. 119, which it closely resembles in theme and vocabulary, it has in the first stanza at least a regular five-beat measure which appropriately expresses that passionate love and enthusiasm which filled the heart of the psalmist. The language is that of the late priestly school. The law and the ritual are the central forces in Israel's life. The ps. was evidently written after the priestly reformation of Nehemiah and Ezra. Apparently the priestly law has been enforced long enough to develop an intense love and appreciation of it. The ps., therefore, may be dated some time during the Gk. period. It was well adapted for use in the synagogue and for purposes of practical instruction. It is a signal demonstration of the fact that the Jewish law, instead of being regarded as a burden, was considered a blessing, Jehovah's best gift to his loyal worshippers.

^a19⁷ In this context the Heb. word torah is evidently used in the technical sense as a description of the priestly teachings embodied in the Heb. scriptures.

^b19⁷ The Heb. idiom means, literally, restores physical vigor.

^c19⁸ I. e., Jehovah's will and character as revealed through Israel's teachers and through the experiences of the nation and of the individual. It was through the cumulative experience of the race that the simple—that is, the inexperienced—were to be made wise.

^d19⁹ This is probably here used as a technical definition of the laws which dealt especially with worship. Cf. Ps. 34¹¹.

^e19⁹ The Heb. term here translated judgments is a technical designation of the typical civil, social, and ceremonial laws such as are found in Ex. 21-23.

^f19¹³ Many translators favor the rendering, also restrain thy servant from the presumptuous. In this case the reference would be to the arrogant rulers and would accord well with the latter part of the line, but it introduces a note not found elsewhere in the ps.; furthermore, it is not supported by the succeeding line. Therefore the current translation is adopted.

§ 178 This ps. is the longest, most elaborate, most artificial poem in the Psalter. It has twenty-two divisions corresponding to the letters of the Heb. alphabet and eight succeeding lines begin with the same letter of the alphabet. In this respect it is akin to Lam. 3, which has three ^g119² Lit., testimonies, but in this ps., as in Dt. 6³⁰, it is clearly equivalent to decrees or ordinances.

THE DUTY OF STUDYING THE LAW

⁵Yea, they commit no iniquity, they walk in his ways.

⁶It is thou who hast given thy precepts, that they may be zealously kept.

⁷Oh that my ways were established, to observe thy statutes!

⁸Then I shall never be ashamed, when I have regard to all of thy commandments.

⁹I give thanks to thee with uprightness of heart, learning thy just judgments.

¹⁰Thy laws do I keep, O Jehovah,^a forsake me not utterly.

¹¹Whereby shall a young man keep his way pure? By observing thy word. Beth ¹²With all my heart I seek thee, let me not wander from thy commands.

¹³Within my heart, that I may not sin against thee, I store up thy word;¹

¹⁴Blessed be thou, O Jehovah! Teach me thy statutes.

¹⁵With my lips I recount all the righteous¹ judgments of thy mouth;

¹⁶In the way of thy decrees I rejoice, as much as in all riches;

¹⁷I meditate on thy decrees, and I attentively regard thy ways;

¹⁸In thy statutes I take delight, I forget not thy words.

¹⁹Deal kindly with thy servant that I may live, and that I may keep thy word; Gimel ²⁰Open thou mine eyes that I may behold wondrous things out of thy law.

²¹A sojourner am I on the earth, hide not from me thy commands;

²²My soul is in exile in its longings at all times for thy judgments.

²³Thou rebukest the proud, the accursed, who err from thy commands.

²⁴Take away from me reproach and contempt, for I have kept thy decrees;

²⁵Though princes sit and talk against me, thy servant doth meditate on thy statutes;

²⁶Yea, thy decrees are my delight, they are the men of my counsel.

lines beginning with each letter of the alphabet. Many of the lines also rhyme at the end. The original measure, which has been at points obscured through scribal additions or omissions, was a regular five-beat. Here, even more than in the other acrostic ps., the parallelism of thought is sacrificed to artificial form. Briggs, in his translation of this ps., has sought by an elaborate transposition of vss. and rearrangement of material to restore a certain parallelism in each succeeding couplet. But even if these radical emendations be accepted, it must be admitted that the parallelism of thought is still incomplete.

The author of this ps. was an early Pharisee or Hasidean who refers repeatedly to the persecutions which he had experienced at the hands of the proud and treacherous apostates who constantly deride and oppress him. It is evident that he was a man of prominence in the community about whom rallied those who were faithful to the law. The indications all point to the earlier part of the Maccabean period as the date of this ps. Its aim was to set forth the value of the law and of the rewards which came from faithfully observing its commands. In this respect it is a valuable historical document, for it expresses the feelings and the devotion of many of the Jews during the earlier part of the Maccabean struggle who preferred death rather than give up their law. It is also a confession of faith. Its acrostic form suggests that it was written so that it might be memorized and recited by the candidates for membership in the scribal order, if not by all faithful Jews. The eight lines under each letter of the alphabet were probably intended to correspond to the eight synonyms for the law which constantly recur throughout the ps. Some commentators have gone so far as to restore these whenever they do not occur in each section, and it is not impossible that their absence at many points in the present text is due to scribal errors.

Duhm's statement that this ps. is the 'emptiest production that ever blackened paper' is, of course, extreme. Its artificial character has resulted, as was practically inevitable, in a large amount of repetition. There is also little trace of logical progress in the thought. The chief emphasis is not upon life and deeds but upon belief and form. The moral and social teachings of the earlier prophets have largely disappeared. Devotion to God and abstract devotion to the law have taken the place of love and service to one's fellow men. Aside from certain lines which possess a beauty and charm of their own, the value of the ps. as a whole is chiefly historical in that it represents the point of view and beliefs of early scribal Pharisaism.

THE PROPHETIC STANDARDS OF RIGHT AND WRONG

Ps. 15, 36¹⁻⁴, 50

§ 179. The Psalmist's Decalogue, Ps. 15

Exordium

Ps. 15 ¹O Jehovah, who shall abide in thy tent?^a
 Who shall dwell in thy holy hill?

^a 119¹⁵⁹ Heb. adds Jehovah.

^t 119¹⁶⁰ Lit., according to thy lovingkindness.

^u 119¹⁶⁰ Correcting the Heb. with the aid of the Gk. and Syr.

^v 119¹⁶¹ Lit., my heart seareth.

^w 119¹⁶⁹ Heb. adds Jehovah.

^x 119¹⁷⁶ A scribe, developing the figure suggested by the verb, has added like a sheep that is lost.

§ 179 This ps. has the simple title, Psalm of David. Its didactic character explains why it was not included in special collections of ps. It is the decalogue of a later psalmist who, in the spirit of the prophets, defines the qualifications for citizenship in Zion in the terms of life and act. He was acquainted with the Deuteronomic and Holiness codes. Cf., e. g., ^{5a} and Lev. 25³⁷. The question form and the figure employed are shared in common with Is. 33¹⁴⁻¹⁶:

The sinners in Zion are filled with terror,
 Shuddering has seized the impious,

^a 15¹ I. e., be the guest of Jehovah.

THE PSALMIST'S DECALOGUE

¹He who walketh without fault and doeth right,
 And speaketh the truth in his heart,
²Who uttereth no slander^b with his tongue,
 Doeth no wrong to his friend,
 Nor taketh up a reproach against his neighbor.
³In his eyes the reprobate^c is despised,
 But those who fear Jehovah he honoreth,
 He sweareth to his neighbor^d and changeth not.
⁴He lendeth not his money for usury,
 Nor taketh a bribe against the innocent.^e
 He who doeth these things shall never be moved.

Ps. 36 ¹An impious utterance is in the mind^f of the wicked man,
 There is no fear of God before his eyes;
²For he flatters himself in his sight,
 That his hateful iniquity will not be found out.^g
³His words^h are trouble and deceit;
 He has ceased to act wisely and well.
⁴He plans on his bed to make trouble,
 He devotes himself to a way that is not good,
 Evil he does not abhor.

The
 criminal type

Who [of us, they say], can abide with devouring fire?
 Who can abide with everlasting burning?

He who walks in righteousness, and speaks uprightness,
 He who rejects that which is gained through oppression,
 Who keeps his hand from taking a bribe,
 Who stops his ears from hearing of bloodshed,
 And who shuts his eyes so as not to countenance evil.
 He shall dwell in lofty heights,
 The fastnesses of the rock shall be his stronghold,
 His bread is provided, his waters are assured.

The parallels are so many and close that there is little doubt that the one is dependent upon the other and the dependence appears to be on the part of the ps. There are no points of contact, however, with the priestly codes or the later ceremonialism. The ps. was probably written before the great priestly reformation about 400 B.C., but it may well have been inspired by the earlier reform work of Nehemiah which led up to the rebuilding of the walls of Jerusalem. It emphasizes the same practical virtues as did Nehemiah, according to Neh. 5. The noble standard that it holds up is one of the high-water marks of O.T. revelation. The psalmist evidently had in mind the ancient decalogue, for he suggests ten sins to which men were especially prone. The ps. deals, however, with acts rather than motives and is in this respect below the exalted yet practical standard held up by Jesus.

^b15^a Lit., go about with slander on his tongue. The exact Eng. idiom is, gives no currency to slander.

^c15^a Gk., the evil-doer. Possibly this is original.

^d15^a So Gk. and Syr. and the demands of the context. Heb., evil or hurt.

^e15^a Cf. Dt. 16¹⁰.

§ 180 This portrait of a thoroughly bad man fits any race or age. It belongs more appropriately in the book of Proverbs, with which it has close affinities, than at the beginning of a ps. describing Jehovah's goodness. It was probably added by an editor who lived in the Gk. period when the sages of Israel were at the height of their influence.

^f36¹ Lit., An oracle of transgression it is to the evil man in the midst of his heart. Certain Gk. MSS. and Lat. and Syr. are doubtless right in reading his heart or mind, as the context demands.

^g36² The meaning of this vs. is obscure. The Heb. verb means, lit., It flatters him in his eyes as regards the finding out of his hateful iniquity. The above rendering apparently represents the thought in the mind of the psalmist and is in accord with the preceding context.

^h36³ Lit., words of his mouth.

Ps. 50 ¹The God of gods¹ speaketh,
Jehovah calleth the earth
From the rising of the sun to its setting.

³Our God cometh and is not silent,^k
Fire devoureth before him,
And round about him the tempest rageth mightily.
⁴He calleth to the heavens above,^l
And to the earth that he may judge his people:

For Jehovahⁿ himself is about to judge.

⁷Hear, O my people, and I will speak,
Of thee, O Israel, would I complain:
Jehovah, thy God, am I.
⁸Not because of thy peace offerings will I reprove thee,
Nor for thy burnt offerings which are continually before me;^o
⁹I will not take from thy house a bullock,
Nor male goats out of thy folds,
¹⁰For all the animals of the forests are mine.
There are thousands of cattle^p upon my mountains;
¹¹I know all the birds of the heavens,^q
And the moving things^r of the fields are mine.

§ 181 Ps. 50, like 15, is from a disciple of the prophets. His ultimate purpose is to make clear the superiority of the prophetic decalogue of Ex. 20 to the merely ceremonial demands of the law. His unusually elaborate introduction in 1-4 indicates that he is well aware of the difficulties of his task, for he lived in an age which was emphasizing ever more strongly the importance of sacrifice and the ritual. Hence Jehovah himself, as in Dt. 33, is represented as coming down to earth and summoning his faithful followers to impart to them the great teaching that heart service and righteous lives and deeds are far more important than the smoke of countless whole burnt-offerings. He does not, however, condemn these popular forms of worship, but puts the social virtues of honesty and truth and personal purity in the forefront. Evidently we have here the discourse of a sage set to music. His breadth, his courage, and his tact all impress us. This ps. also illustrates the broad outlook of later Judaism, which included in its temple hymn-book a poem that attributed a secondary place to its cherished sacrificial system. The ps. probably comes from the middle or latter part of the Persian period.

¹50¹ The Heb. reads, El, God, Jehovah. But the third title, Jehovah, evidently belongs with the second line, where it completes the measure.

¹50² The Heb. adds God. But this destroys the metre of this line and was probably added by a scribe.

^k50³ Heb. reads, Let our God enter in and let him not be silent. Possibly this line is but a pious ejaculation of a later scribe.

¹50⁴ Slightly correcting the Heb. text in accordance with the reading of one MS. and the demands of the context.

^m50⁵ The Gk. employs the third person rather than the first throughout this vs.

ⁿ50⁶ Restoring the original Jehovah instead of the present Heb., God.

^o50⁷ I. e., Jehovah brings no charge against his people of failure to render their ceremonial dues.

^p50¹⁰ The familiar and poetic rendering, The cattle on a thousand hills, is an impossible Heb. construction, for the Heb., on hills of a thousand, is meaningless and impossible. A very slight change gives the above consistent rendering.

^q50¹¹ So Gk., Syr., and Targ. Heb., mountains.

^r50¹¹ I. e., the reptiles and crawling things.

^a 50¹⁴ Restoring the original reading. Heb., God.
[†] 50¹⁵ Possibly the original read, I will glorify thee.
^u 50¹⁶ This line may have been added by a scribe, but it is required to mark a transition.
^v 50¹⁶ I. e., for the wicked man to repeat the divine laws is but hypocrisy.
^w 50¹⁷ I. e., rejected.
^x 50¹⁸ Gk., Syr., and Targ., thou runnest with him. Possibly this represents the original, for it is closely parallel to the following line.
^y 50²⁰ The Heb. construction is awkward. Possibly the original read, thou speakest shamefully against thy brother.
^z 50²¹ Following the Syr. which has retained the pronoun.
^a 50²³ The Heb. reads, and he who puts away. The text is evidently corrupt. A change of one consonant gives the reading adopted above, which is supported by the context. Possibly these two words are a later scribal addition, and the last line should simply read, I will let him see the salvation of Jehovah (Heb., God).
^b 50²³ Heb., God's, but this is the later editor's equivalent of Jehovah's or, if written, as often, in abbreviated form, of the initial letter which in the Heb. is the same as the possessive my, which the context and metre require and which was in all probability found in the original.

§ 182 Ps. 53 is a duplicate of 14. Both have the title, For the Musical Director. A Psalm of David. Ps. 53 was inserted in the Elohist collection so that Elohim or God has been substituted throughout for Jehovah. The other minor variations are simply due to scribal errors and the evident purpose in 14 is to generalize and thus adapt the original ps. to liturgical use. The Gk., Lat., and Syr. Hexapla add nine irrelevant lines, which are quoted in Rom. 3¹⁰⁻¹². They were compiled from Ps. 5³, 10⁷, 36¹, 140³, Is. 59⁷. ^a

The original ps. perhaps included only 1-5. They refer not to the heathen nations, as has often been urged, but to the worst foes of the community, the atheistic, corrupt devourers of the people, who figure in many other of the pss. of the Persian period as the foes of the pious. The five-beat measure, frequently used in the lamentation song, is here effectively employed. The prayer in 7 is in the four-beat measure. Its connection with the preceding is not close. The sanctuary on Mount Zion has been rebuilt but there has been no general return of the Jews. If this last stanza was not an original part of the ps. it was probably added not long before the appearance of Nehemiah.

^a 14¹ The Heb. has in this line the sing. collective but the plural in the next line. The ones referred to are the impious, senseless rulers.

^b 14³ Completing the vs. from the parallel 53³, which has retained the have backslidden that has dropped out.

^c 14⁵ With Briggs (Pss., I, 104), following the reconstructed and consistent reading suggested by the parallel 53⁵. Heb. reads:

*There they were seized with terror, for God is with the righteous generation,
They put to shame the counsel of the afflicted, for Jehovah is his refuge.*

§ 183 This ps. is distinctly personal. It is evidently the outgrowth of profound individual experience. At the same time it expresses universal human experience. To a noble soul the greatest source of pain is the consciousness of sin and of having wronged another. This pain, however, is an essential element in the healing process. Like the pain of a physical wound, it

^e 32² A scribe has added, as a marginal note, And there is no deceit in his spirit. This line, however, lacks the regular metre of the vs. and the parallelism of thought is complete without it.

 ²For as grass they shall quickly wither,
 And fade away like the green herb.

rallies all the healing forces and makes it possible for the Divine Physician to effect the cure. The practical didactic purpose of the ps. is evident. It is difficult, however, to determine its exact date. It unmistakably reflects that deeper insight which came to the Jews after the exile. It is a companion and, in a sense, the sequel of 51. Its spirit and theme are characteristic of the ps. of the middle and latter part of the Persian period. The consciousness of Jehovah's favor and the spirit of rejoicing, cf. ⁷ and ⁸, suggest that it was written after Nehemiah had done his work of restoration. It probably comes from somewhere between 400 and 331 B.C.

^{132^a} Here the psalmist describes in characteristic Oriental imagery his feelings before he had confessed his sin and knew by experience the happiness of him whose sins were forgiven.

^{132^b} The Gk. translators evidently had difficulty in translating this line. They read, I was changed into misery as when thorns smite me; but the Heb. gives a satisfactory rendering closely parallel to ².

^{132^c} Slightly revising the Heb. text as the context and the metre demand.

^{132^d} Again correcting the Heb. in keeping with the context.

^{132^e} Cf. Pr. 16²⁰. The Heb. reads, lit., I will counsel, mine eye upon thee. Part of the line has apparently been lost.

^{132^f} The metre here changes to the four-beat and the stanza may be secondary. The thought is, do not make the mistakes of brute beasts which have to be guided by a bridle and halter.

^{132^g} A scribe has added the ungrammatical, awkward note not near to thee.

^{132^h} Vs. ¹¹ is evidently a later liturgical addition:

*Be glad in Jehovah, and rejoice ye righteous;
 And shout for joy, all ye who are upright in heart.*

§ 184 This is an acrostic ps. Each four lines begin with a succeeding letter of the Heb. alphabet. Certain lines have been displaced; others compressed or enlarged. Four lines (associated with the Heb. letter ayin) have been lost in the Heb. but retained in the Gk. The theme of the ps. is stated in the first vs. It is the problem of evil, and the poet maintains in general the position of Job's friends. He asserts that if the wicked do not reap the consequences of their crimes their descendants will. He also looks forward to a future judgment, ¹², ²⁰. In ²⁸ the author asserts that he is an old man but he repudiates the position later maintained by the aged author of Ecc. It probably comes from the earlier part of the Persian period. The poet may have been a contemporary of the author of Job. In Job 14²⁻⁵ the assertion made in ⁴⁻¹¹ is combated, indicating that the poem of Job is slightly later.

¹⁹They are not ashamed in the time of calamity,

^a37^s Lit., roll upon.

^o37^o Lit., he will cause thy righteousness to go forth as light. But the above translation represents the English idiom. The idea is that Jehovah will fully vindicate those who put their trust in him.

^p37^p A line is needed to complete the regular acrostic structure that has been observed throughout the ps. It is supplied by ¹⁴^o, which is alien to its context.

^q37^q It is exceedingly probable that this line is corrupt, since it repeats the thought already expressed in the preceding vs. and is itself lacking in clearness. Possibly the original read, Fret not thyself because of the evil.

^r37^r Slightly changing the order of words in the sentence as the metrical structure of the vs. requires.

^s37^s Or peace.

^t37^t A scribe has added poor and needy and the line that completes ⁷.

^a37²⁰ This vs. evidently became corrupt at an early date, so that it is almost impossible to restore its original form.

^v37²¹ Transferring the last line of this vs., which is superfluous in its present context, where it was probably introduced through a scribal error instead of after the first line of ²⁰, to where it is demanded by the context.

^w37²¹ The present Heb. makes no sense. Probably it would be translated, the splendor of the meadows, but it is more probable that the Heb. originally read as above, as the context demands.

^x37²² The Gk. reads, those who bless him . . . those who curse him. Possibly this rendering is the original.

^y37²³ Slightly revising the Heb. text.

^c37³³ Following the Gk. and adding the last word as the metre requires.

^d37³⁴ Again following the Gk., which is supported by the context, by the metre, and the demands of the acrostic structure of the ps.

^b37³² Lit., to slay him.

^c37³³ Lit., forsake him in his hands.

^d37³⁴ Lit., keep his way. The text, however, is doubtful, but the general meaning is clear.

THE FATE OF THE RIGHTEOUS

And he will exalt thee to possess the land,
On the uprooting of the wicked thou shalt look.
³⁵I have seen the wicked, terror-inspiring,^o
And putting forth his strengthⁱ as a green cedar;^o

I sought him—he was not to be found.

³⁷Watch the perfect andⁱ upright man,

³⁹The salvation of the righteous is from Jehovah,
And their refuge in the time of distress,

§ 185. Death the Great Leveller, Ps. 49

Ps. 49 ¹Hear this, all ye peoples,
Give ear all ye inhabitants of the world,
²Both men of low and high degree,
Rich and poor together;
³My mouth shall speak wisdom,
The meditation of my heart shall be understanding.
⁴I will incline mine ear unto a parable,
I will unfold my problem^l on the harp.

⁵Why should I fear in evil days,
When the iniquity of my insidious foes^m encompasses me,
⁶They who trust in their wealth,
And boast in the greatness of their riches?
⁷Surely no man can buy himself off,ⁿ
Can give to Jehovah his price,^o

^o37³⁵ Following the Gk.
ⁱ37³⁵ The literal meaning appears to be and making himself bare, that is, stripping himself for action.
^o37³⁶ Gk. and Syr. has a cedar of Lebanon. Possibly this is original.
^h37³⁶ So Gk., Syr., and Lat. Heb., he passed away.
ⁱ37³⁷ Heb. adds, repeating the idea of the first verb, see.
ⁱ37³⁷. ³⁸ Or a future.
^k37⁴⁰ Lat. omits this verb.
§ 185 The psalmist is here struggling with the same problem as the book of Job. His logic leads him to seek retribution for the wicked and vindication for the righteous in the life beyond the grave; but he pauses on the threshold of that faith. He simply states the problem without suggesting a solution. He probably wrote during the middle or latter part of the Persian period.
^l49⁴ Lit., riddle, i. e., the enigma that is developed in the ps. that follows.
^m49⁵ Lit., my supplanters. Possibly the line should be read, when my insidious foes surround me with iniquity.
ⁿ49⁷ Heb., a brother cannot redeem a man or a man cannot redeem his brother. But the above reading is supported by certain of the MSS. and it accords best with the context. The idea is that no human power can save a man from the fate which Jehovah metes out impartially to all.
^o49⁷ Vs. ⁹ is the immediate sequel of ⁷. The scribes, however, have inserted an obscure prose note which is apparently to be read, for the redemption of their life is too precious, and he must leave it alone forever.

DEATH THE GREAT LEVELLER

- ⁹That he may live on forever,
And not see the grave,^p
¹⁰Seeing that the wise die,
Likewise the fool and the brutish perish,
And they leave their wealth to others,
¹¹Their graves^q are their homes forever,
Their places of abode for all generations—
They who have called lands by their own names!
¹²Man does not abide in honor,
But is like the beasts that perish.
- ¹³This is the fate of those who are full of confidence,
And the end of those who are pleased with their portion.^r
¹⁴Like a flock they are put into Sheol,
Death is their shepherd and rules over them,^s
Soon their form wastes away,^t
Sheol becomes their home.
¹⁵But Jehovah will redeem my life,
From the hand of Sheol when it seizes me.^u
¹⁶Fear not, when one grows rich,
When the glory of his house is increased,
¹⁷For at his death he takes nothing,
His glory cannot go down after him;
¹⁸For if, while he lives, he blesses his life,^v
And praises it^w because it is well with him,
¹⁹It will go back to the generation of his fathers,
Who behold the light nevermore.

^q49¹¹ Following the Gk., Syr., and Targ., and correcting two Heb. letters which have been transposed.

^r49¹³ Interpreting the Heb. idiom as in Dt. 21¹⁷ and II Kgs. 2⁹.

^s49¹⁴ The text of this vs. is almost hopelessly corrupt. A scribe has introduced the idea that the righteous shall rule over them. But this idea is inconsistent with the context, which evidently carries on the figure of the flock, with death as the shepherd, introduced into the first part of the vs.

^t49¹⁴ Lit., in the morning and their form to corruption. The Gk., however, suggests the above reconstruction which is consistent with the context. The reading of the last line is only conjectural.

^u49¹⁵ Possibly these two lines are secondary and express the pious hope of a later scribe. He apparently does not have in mind individual immortality, but simply Jehovah's continued preservation of his life.

^v49¹⁸ I. e., congratulates himself that he is still alive.

^w49¹⁸ Heb., thanks thee. But the man's life seems to be the object as it is in turn the subject of the following sentence, i. e., a man's life goes down into Sheol, which was conceived of as the cheerless, unlighted abode of the shades.

^x49²⁰ Correcting the text as in ¹².

§ 186 This ps. has many affinities with 32. Its strong didactic purpose is evident. In imagination one sees the disciples of the ancient sage gathered about him as he teaches them this song.

which embodies the essence of his moral and spiritual instruction. Cf. 9. 11. That they may readily memorize and remember its teachings, he has put them in the acrostic form. Through a scribal error the sixth couplet has been lost. To complete the number a later editor has added a postscript in the four-beat measure. The same or another editor has also associated the ps. in the superscription with David, but it bears all the marks of its post-exilic origin and was probably written during the middle or latter part of the Persian period.

The
attitude of trust

¹³⁴³⁰ Following certain Gk. MSS. and the demands of the context and the metre in supplying the word Jehovah.

¹³⁴³¹ The acrostic ps. is complete with this vs. A later editor or scribe has added the refrain in the four-beat measure:

*Jehovah redeemeth the life of his servants,
And none of them who trust in him shall be punished.*

§ 187 A later editor ascribed this ps. to David and attributed it to the period when Doeg the Edomite came and told Saul and said to him, 'David is come to the house of Ahimelech.' Undoubtedly this editor was right in interpreting the ps. as directed originally against a powerful but unprincipled official. Vs. ⁸ breathes, however, the spirit of a post-exilic rather than a pre-exilic psalmist. Nehemiah's vivid portraits of the rulers within and without the Judean community during the middle part of the Persian period suggest close analogies. The ps. may even come from the latter part of the Gk. period, when high priests like Menelaus and Jason richly deserved the bitter denunciations embodied in this ps.

¹⁵²¹ The address is evidently ironical. A scribe has added the disconnected phrase, The kindness of God, perhaps to call attention to the fact that the arrogant sinner's strength and prosperity were simply his by divine favor.

¹⁵²² A scribe has added doing deceit. But this thought is later introduced in vs. ⁴ and at this point destroys the metrical harmony of the vs.

Ps. 91 ¹Thou^w who dwellest in the secret place of the Most High, § 188 The first ps. bears no superscription and in certain codices it is not even numbered. It was evidently given its present place by the latest editor that it might serve as an appropriate introduction to the entire Psalter. Cf. the introduction to Pr. 1¹⁻⁴. It reflects the point of view of the devoted student of the law and the prophets. Vs. ² is based on Josh. 1⁸, and ³ draws its figures from Jer. 17³⁻⁸ and Ezek. 47¹². The author also writes in the spirit and literary mould of the late wisdom school. The background is a period of peace. The foes of the pious are not outside the community, as in the Persian period, but the wicked, the scoffers, those Jews who had no love for the law or respect for the teachings of the prophets and sages. All these indications point to the latter part of the Gk. period, not long after the days of the Chronicler, but before the beginning of the Maccabean struggle. The influence of the close contact with the debasing Gk. civilization best explains the presence of the scoffers. B. Sir. 6²⁷, 14²⁰. ²¹ reflect both the thought of this Ps. and a similar background. The conception of the final judgment in ⁴ is not as late as Dan. 12¹, but is parallel to that of Is. 26¹⁴⁻¹⁹, which seems to antedate the persecutions of Antiochus Epiphanes that began in 168 B.C. Its date, therefore, lies probably between 250 and 200 B.C.

Barring the illustration in ³, the parallelism is remarkably close, and extends beyond the synonymous parallelism of succeeding vs. to the two regular strophes, which stand in perfectly balanced antithetic relation to each other. Vs. ³ interrupts this, and may be secondary; but the antithetic figure in ⁴ seems to depend upon that in ³. The impressive four-beat measure predominates but the metre is irregular.

^a ¹² Or, following a possible revision, fear.

^r ¹² Lit., murmurs. The reference is to the low murmuring of Oriental students, who, like the Moslems to-day, recite their sacred law aloud that they may remember and impress its teachings upon their minds.

^s ¹² This vs. is a composite: the simile in the first line is taken from Jer. 17⁸ where it is applied to the man who trusts in Jehovah. The figure of the living trees on the banks of the river of life, which bear fruit each month and whose leaf never withers, is from Ezek. 47¹². The last line, like ^{2b}, was probably suggested by Josh. 1⁸. Since this vs. departs widely from the regular metre of the rest of the ps. and its balanced rhythm of stanza, Briggs regards it as a later editorial addition (Pss., I, 6).

^t ¹⁴ Not so is repeated in the Gk., but the parallelism with ¹ does not support it.

^v ¹⁴ In this late ps. the reference is probably to the resurrection and final judgment as in Is. 26¹⁴⁻¹⁹.

^w ¹⁴ The metre is defective; the usual verb enter has probably dropped out.

§ 189 The serene, stately ninety-first ps. is one of the greatest poems of the Psalter. Its prominence in the story of Jesus' temptation indicates that he was familiar with it and that its

^w ⁹¹ The address in this line is clearly in the second person, as demanded by vs. ². A scribe, overlooking this fact, has changed the verbs in ¹ into the third person instead of the second.

And my fortress, my God in whom I trust,'

And under his wings he will hide thee.

His faithfulness is a shield and defence,

Nor of the arrow that flieth by day,

Of the destruction that wasteth at noon-day.

heroic optimism was a great source of comfort to him even though it could not be made a cloak to cover sensational and unjustifiable methods. In the current English translation, based on the Heb., there is a confusion in the opening vs. between the second and third persons. It is exceedingly probable, however, that the original was in the form of a direct address. The didactic purpose of the ps. is clearly evident. It may have been originally addressed by some venerable sage to his disciple, when the youth's preliminary moral and religious training had been completed and he was just about to enter upon his membership in the congregation of those who worshipped at Jehovah's temple. It is based on the lifelong experience of the sage. It recalls the charge of an ancient warrior-king as he conferred knighthood upon a youthful follower. It was well calculated to inspire confidence and courage in the presence of countless perils. It remains as one of the priceless heritages from Israel's heroic past. The serene atmosphere and the prominent wisdom note indicate that this ps. probably comes from the Gk. period.

^a91² Following the Lat. and Syr. Heb., I will say.

^y91³ It is probably best, with Briggs, to read this as a passive participle rather than as a noun (commonly translated fowler). This reading is strongly supported by the metre.

^a91⁴ Slightly correcting the Heb., which reads pestilence; but cf. ⁶, where deliverance from pestilence is described. The figure throughout ², ⁴ is that of a hunted bird.

^a91⁵ This vs. is loosely connected with the context and strikes the one negative, dissonant note in this peerless ps. It may be a later addition.

^b91⁶ The Heb. word thou probably represents a scribal corruption for the similar word thou sayest, in which case the line is in perfect keeping with the parallelism and with ².

^c91⁷ Gk., asp, which reading is obtained by a change of but one letter in the Heb., and this may represent the original although the parallelism with the following line is more perfect in the standard Heb. text.

^d91⁸ This paragraph represents the word of Jehovah.

THE FATE OF THE RIGHTEOUS

¹⁵He will call upon me and I will answer him,
 In time of trouble I will be with him,
 I will deliver him and bring him honor,
¹⁶With length of days will I satisfy him.
 And show him^e my salvation.

§ 190. Prosperity of Him Who Fears Jehovah, Ps. 112

His present
prosperity

Ps. 112 ¹Happy is the man who fears Jehovah,
 Who delights greatly in his commands.
²His offspring shall be mighty in the land,
 The generation of the upright shall be blessed.
³Wealth and riches are in his house,
 And his righteousness endures forever.
⁴Light shines^f for the upright,
 Gracious and compassionate is the righteous.
⁵It is well with the gracious and the benevolent,
 Who maintains his affairs with equity.

His abiding honor

⁶For that one shall never be moved,
 The righteous shall be in everlasting remembrance;
⁷Of tidings of evil he has no fear,
 His mind is fixed^g in Jehovah.
⁸His mind is established, he is not afraid,
 Until he beholds the end of his foes.^h
⁹He disperses, he gives to the poor,
 His righteousness stands firm forever,
 His horn will be exalted in honor.
¹⁰The wicked man will see it and be vexed,
 He will gnash his teeth and melt away;
 The desireⁱ of the wicked will perish.

§ 191. The Consolation of the Innocent, Ps. 73.

The
prosperity
and insolence
of the wicked

Ps. 73 ¹Verily God is good to Israel,
 To those who are pure in heart.

^e91¹⁶ Possibly the original read, I will satiate him, as found in Ps. 50²³. The Heb. word might easily be mistaken for the one found in the standard text.

§ 190 This acrostic ps. is closely related to the acrostic 111: the one deals with the character of Jehovah and the other with that of his faithful servants. Both probably come from the same author and from a contemporary of Ben Sira. He therefore lived during the latter part of the Gk. period. It has been suggested with great plausibility that Simon the Just, the powerful high priest and friend of Ben Sira, was in the mind of the psalmist when he painted the portrait of a God-fearing man.

^f112⁴ A scribe has added, destroying the regular measure of the ps., in darkness.

^g112⁷ Apparently, through a corruption of the Heb., trust in has been added. It is not required by the context nor supported by the measure.

^h112⁸ Lit., beholds his foes.

ⁱ112¹⁰ Or hope.

§ 191 This ps. deals with the problem ever before the mind of the Jewish race in the days following the destruction of Jerusalem. In the conclusions which it presents it has many analogies with the book of Job, although it does not depart absolutely from the solutions offered by Job's friends. The consciousness of God's nearness is, however, the psalmist's chief consolation.

THE CONSOLATION OF THE INNOCENT

- ²My feet¹ were almost gone from under me,
 My steps had well nigh slipped,
³For I was filled with envy at the boasters,
 When I beheld the prosperity of the wicked.
⁴For they have no pains to endure,²
 Sound and unimpaired is their strength;
⁵In the trouble of men they have no share,
 Neither are they stricken as other men.
⁶Hence pride is for them as a necklace,
 A garment of violence clothes them.
⁷Their iniquity¹ comes forth from their fatness;^m
 Plans of the mind overflow.
⁸They scoff and speak of evil,
 They haughtily plot^a oppression.
⁹They direct their speech^o against heaven,
 While their tongue goes about in the earth;^p
¹¹And they say, 'How doth God know?
 And how can there be knowledge with the Most High?'
¹²Behold, such as these are the wicked,
 In continual ease they increase their wealth.
- ¹³Surely in vain have I kept my heart pure,
 And washed my palms in innocence,
¹⁴And been smitten all day long,
 And endured chastening each morning.
¹⁵Had I said, 'Thus^a will I speak,'
 I had been unfaithful to the generation of thy children.
¹⁶But when I pondered that I might understand this,^r
 The more troublesome did it seem in mine eyes;
¹⁷Until I penetrated the sacred things^s of God,
 And came to understand their outcome.
¹⁸Surely thou settest them^t on slippery ground;
 Thou hurlest them down into ruin.
¹⁹How in a moment are they turned to destruction!
 They are gone, they are consumed by terrors!
²⁰As a dream after awakening, O Lord!

The

ing perplexity
of the faithful

Like the author of Job the poet looked expectantly beyond the portals of death for the ultimate solution of his vexed problem. The ps. probably comes from the Gk. period and is an important forerunner of the belief in individual immortality that is for the first time definitely asserted in Dan. 12.

¹73^a A scribe has prefixed and as for me.

^a73^e Lit., keep speaking.

^o73^f Lit., their mouth.

^p73^g Vs. 11 is the immediate sequel of 9. A scribe has inserted the note, therefore we bring back the people thither, and the waters of fullness will be drained out to them.

^r73^h The reference is clearly to the cry of despair in 12.

^v73²¹ Lit., my reins.
^w73²² Heb., beasts.
^x73²⁴ Heb., and after glory, but a different division of the Heb. letters and a change of one letter gives the above harmonious reading.
^y73²⁶ This line has been expanded by the addition of my heart and God.
^z73²⁷ Lit., all who go a whoring from thee.
^a73²⁸ As in ², a scribe has prefixed and as for me, which is not supported by the metre.
^b73²⁸ So Gk., Syr., and certain Heb. MSS. In trad. Heb. a scribe has added Jehovah.
^c73²⁸ So Syr. If not original it at least interprets the Heb., which reads works.
 § 192 In this ps. we enter into the problems and atmosphere of Enoch and of Dan. 10-12. In the light of the ideas peculiar to those apocryphal books the difficulties of this ps. are explained. From the statement in ⁷ that the gods addressed in ²⁻⁴ shall die like men, it is clear that they are not human rulers. Rather, as in Dan. 10-12, they are the patron angels of the nations. In Enoch 91¹⁵ a similar prediction is found: On the tenth week there shall be the great eternal judgment in which he will execute vengeance amongst the angels. Also in Enoch 10¹⁴ their destruction is foretold. In the thought of later Judaism the fortunes and conditions of each nation were attributed to the action of its patron angel. These patron angels corresponded to the heathen gods worshipped by the different races. Dan. 4²⁵ and 10^{20, 21} teach that these gods were to be destroyed and that Jehovah was to rule absolutely and eternally. These ideas are peculiar to the latter part of the Gk. or the earlier part of the Maccabean period. Here this ps. finds its natural historical setting. The date, 204 B.C., urged by Hitzig, when Antiochus the Great was about to invade Palestine, is possible. It probably antedates the persecutions of Antiochus Epiphanes.
^d82¹ Probably originally Jehovah.
^e82² I. e., show favoritism to. Cf. Ex. 23^{3, 6-8}, Dt. 1¹⁷, Mal. 2⁹.

³O Jehovah, how long shall the wicked,
How long shall the wicked exult?

They speak boastfully, all the workers of iniquity.

And thine inheritance they sorely^a afflict.

¹⁸² The antecedent here is not clear. The heathen gods and the nations which they represent are apparently in the psalmist's mind.

§ 193 This ps. probably comes from the latter part of the Gk. period and is directed not against the foreign foes but against the corrupt and unprincipled Jewish rulers who, like the high priests at the beginning of the Maccabean struggle, allied themselves with the foes of their nation and did not hesitate to punish those who were faithful to the law. Cf. ^a. It clearly expresses the perplexities and beliefs of the forerunners of the Hasideans and Pharisees who later showed their loyalty to Jehovah's law by facing death for its sake.

^{a94} ^a Supplying the adverbial idea implied by the verb and required to carry out the measure of the line.

Ps. 125 ¹They who trust in Jehovah are as Mount Zion, which cannot be moved.

So Jehovah is round about his people, from henceforth and forevermore.
³For the sceptre of wickedness shall not rest^a upon the lot of the righteous,
To the end that the righteous may not reach out their hands to iniquity.

Prayer for justice

Do good, O Jehovah, to the good and to the upright in heart;
⁵But those who turn aside to their crooked ways—may Jehovah drive them away.^o ^{194¹⁵} Probably Briggs is right in concluding that righteousness here is personified even as we to-day personify justice.

^{194¹⁶} Lit., after it. This is the common Heb. idiom equivalent to follow.

^{194²⁰} Lit., have fellowship with thee.

^{194²¹} Lit., and they condemn innocent blood.

^{194²³} So certain Heb. MSS. and Gk. Trad. Heb. text repeats verb through dittography and adds our God.

§ 194 The reference in ³ to the sceptre of wickedness, which may lead the righteous to reach out their hands to iniquity, is a vivid description of the policy of Antiochus Epiphanes. The antithesis also in ^{4, 5} between the righteous and the perverse is a clear reflection of conditions in the Jewish state at the beginning of the Maccabean struggle.

^{125³} Possibly the Gk. is right in reading, for he [Jehovah] will not suffer to rest.

^{125⁵} A scribe has expanded this last line by adding evil-doers; peace upon Israel.

Ps. 133 ¹Behold how good and pleasant it is for brothers to dwell together!
²It is like the precious oil upon the head which runs down upon the beard,
Even on Aaron's^a beard, running down upon the collar of his garment.
³Like the dew of Hermon, that descends upon the mountains of Zion;
For there^b Jehovah hath commanded the blessing, even life forevermore.

§ 195 This ps. is closely related in theme and spirit to 127. Both reflect the type of wisdom thought and the relative prosperity of the Gk. period.

¹128³ So Gk.

²128⁵ A scribe has transferred three words which belong to ⁴ and inserted them in ⁵. Restored to their logical and metrical position, they give us two well-balanced lines.

³128⁶ A later editor has added here, as at the end of 125, Peace be to Israel.

§ 196 The unity which the poet has in mind, if the present text be original, is not merely that of a family but of the Jewish race assembled for public worship. The sense of racial and religious unity spreads and delights one even as the incense of the descending oil or the refreshing dews from Hermon. The ps. probably comes from the Gk. period.

The Student's Old Testament

*Logically and Chronologically
Arranged and Translated*

BY

CHARLES FOSTER KENT, PH.D.

WOOLSEY PROFESSOR OF BIBLICAL LITERATURE IN YALE UNIVERSITY

Announcement

The five essentials for Old Testament study:

(1) A systematic classification of its contents.

THE Old Testament is a library containing the writings of Israel's inspired teachers, who lived at periods far removed from each other, wrote from widely different points of view, and expressed their thoughts in the language and literary forms peculiar to the primitive Semitic East. Their modern readers, however, live in the very different western world. The result is that, while the combination of early songs, primitive traditions, ethnological tables, tribal stories, genealogical lists, prophetic exhortations, laws, judicial precedents, and historical narratives found, for example, in such a book as Exodus, seems perfectly natural to the intuitive Oriental, it is a fertile source of confusion to the logical Occidental. The obvious solution of the difficulty is to be found in systematic classification. This work was begun by the Greek translators of the Old Testament, to whom is chiefly due the approximately logical arrangement of the books in the English Bible. The confusion may be still further eliminated by grouping together those writings which have the same general theme, aim, and literary form, and then by rearranging them within each group in the approximate order in which they were written.

(2) A comparative presentation of its original sources.

Where there are different versions of the same narrative or where two or more have been combined together—as is often the case in the first twelve books of the Old Testament—it is important that the originally distinct versions be printed side by side, as in a harmony, that they may be studied comparatively and as independent literary units.

(3) A lucid, exact translation. The third essential is a clear, vivid, dignified translation, which will represent not merely the words but also the ideas, the spirit, and the beauty of the original, and which will put the reader, unacquainted with Hebrew, in possession of the latest contributions of philology, exegesis, and theology.

(4) Clear literary analysis. The fourth is a clear literary analysis, which will make it possible readily to trace the logical thought of a story, law, sermon, or poem, and to note the relation of the different parts to each other and to the whole.

(5) Illuminating introductions and foot-notes. Finally concise, lucid notes are demanded, which will at once present the historical background and the critical, geographical, and archæological data required to illuminate the obscurities of the text, without distracting attention from its beauty and thought.

Aims and plan of the Student's Old Testament. These five absolute essentials the Students' Old Testament aims to supply in the fullest measure and in the most direct and usable form. The general plan is unique in its simplicity and economy of space. By combining a lucid, scholarly translation, a logical and chronological classification, and a critical and a literary analysis of the text with brief introductions and notes at the foot of the page, the reader is at once placed in command of the practical results of modern biblical research, many of which are otherwise found only in cumbersome technical works, intelligible only to the specialist.

Its origin. The sane, careful scholarship and the reverent constructive spirit of the author are already known to a wide circle of Bible students through his History of the Hebrew People and his volumes in the Messages of the Bible. The present extensive work is the result of years of preparation, in which he has also been able to profit by the generous suggestions and criticisms of a large number of biblical scholars and practical teachers. The whole has been prepared to meet not theoretical but practical needs and has been tested at each point in university and Bible classes.

Its point of view and method. The work embodies the positive conclusions of the many hundreds of earnest critical scholars, who have during the past two centuries been grappling with the intricate problems of the Old Testament. For the first time in its history the various versions of its more important stories and historical records are printed throughout in parallel columns so that they can be readily studied in approximately their original form. In the introductions and foot-notes the biblical data upon which these results are based are cogently presented so that the ordinary Bible reader can readily understand and estimate their significance. Where the positions are established the fact is indicated, and where there is still uncertainty this is also frankly stated. When at times the author's conclusions differ from those of the majority of scholars the reasons for the departure are fully outlined.

Its practical value. To the ordinary conservative biblical student, who rejects or views with alarm the critical positions of modern Old Testament teachers, an opportunity is offered, for the first time, of ascertaining just what those positions are and the chief reasons therefor. To many it will be a genuine relief to find that the foundations of Christian faith, instead of being destroyed, are simply being laid on a deeper and broader historical basis, and that the newer methods of interpretation are supremely helpful in gaining a true knowledge of the eternal messages of the Bible. To the rapidly increasing body of progressive Bible readers, who accept the principles and in general appreciate the practical value of critical biblical research, this clear, definite presentation of its more important fruits cannot fail to be most welcome. It furnishes to the historian the data for the easy reconstruction of biblical history, to the literary student the basis for a new understanding and appreciation of the wonderful literature of the Old Testament, and to the pastor, the Sunday-school teacher, the parent, and the individual reader positive religious facts and teachings, the want of which is being strongly felt in this age, when destructive conclusions are much in evidence. Above all the Student's Old Testament presents those foundations—laid bare through the untiring labors of generations of Christian scholars and by the faithful application of scientific method—upon which Old Testament interpretation and doctrine promise in the future to rest.

No effort or expense has been spared to make this work a complete manual for class-room study, for reading, and for reference. Each volume is complete in itself, embodying all the cognate Old Testament and apocryphal literature in its given field. A detailed table of contents, index, page-headings, and cross-references facilitate its use by primary as well as advanced readers.

Each volume is also fully equipped with thoroughly modern topographical and historical maps, which are introduced in connection with the literature of each period. Comparative chronological charts make it possible to trace readily the growth and approximate dates of the Old Testament and apocryphal writings in connection with the events and movements which determined their form and which in turn they record. Tables of weights and measures and carefully selected and detailed bibliographies, introduced in connection with each epoch, supply both elementary and advanced students with a complete equipment for intelligent reading and fruitful study.
